If the Middle Class would make a careful analysis of the farmer-labor platform (and in all major premises there is no fundamental differences between the platform of 1934 and that of 1936. The only outstanding difference is the fact that the document of 1936 was constructed to eliminate the possiblity of garbling and misquotation.) They will find that it aims, not to eliminate the middle-class, but to eliminate the power of exploitation held by Big Business, entrepreneurs, who contribute no useful service, yet fix the price that the Middle Class must pay for the products which it must sell for what it can get in a highly competitive market definitely limited by the ability of the buying power of the people. Every plank in the platform and every promise in the farmer-labor philosophy is based on a desire to eliminate private monopoly, and private ownership of natural resources to the end that there shall be a more equitable distribution of the nation's wealth That such a reorganization of the national economy is essential if the Middle Class is to survive, should be apparent to anyone from the following statistics:

> More than 3,000,000 persons formerly engaged in middle class occupations and at least 500,000 middle class youth who have never been employed are today unemployed. These figures do not include those farmers who are part of the middle class. Even during "prosperity" about 1 concern in 8 went bankrupt. In 1933 approximately 68,000 manufacturing concerns were closed. Chain stores drew 25 percent of the total sales. In 1932 the U. S. Office of Education estimated that 200,000 teachers (more than 1 in 4) were unemployed. At present unemployment among professionals has risen above 750,000, or an average of 1 in 4. Figures from the Dept. of Commerce show that 30 per cent of all salaried workers (including many professionals) employed in 1929 in mining, manufacturing, construction, water transportation and railroads were out of these industries in 1932. Those still employed were receiving an averge of 16 per cent less than in 1929. A study of the Urban Relief Population (in 13 cities) as of August, 1935 reveals that "17 per cent or 18 per cent of the employable persons on (urban) relief belong to the white collar group." Today the middle class is composed on only 2,700,000 business men and independent professionals as against 10,300,000 salaried employes including salaried professionals.

Thus it will be seen that the Middle Class is being ground out of existence by the very economic forces of which they are the staunchest defenders. It would seem that the wise course for the business and professional groups to pursue, would be to make common cause with the producers against the onslaughts of the common enemy; entrenched capital. A fairer distribution of the products of the farm and of labor will create a greater buying power, which in the final analysis is the pivot upon which the fate of the Middle Class hangs.

NO ALLIANCE EXISTS
(Minnesota Leader)

Certain Capitalist newspapers have attempted to make an issue of the fact that Governor Floyd B. Olson is slated to address the Jefferson day banquet at the St. Paul auditorium next Monday evening.

These newspapers have intimated that the appearance of the governor upon the program shows conclusively that there exists an alliance between the Wolf Democrats and the Farmer-Laborites.

There is not a word of truth in the implication. No alliance exists between the Farmer-Labor party and any other political party or organization. If the Wolf Democrats find their own slate unacceptable and desire to support the Farmer-Labor candidates, that's their business.

As for Governor Olson's appearance upon the program next Monday, that is entirely satisfactory to us. As the governor expressed it: "He (Jefferson) does not belong to just the Democratic party".

As quoted in the press, Governor Olson said:

"Jefferson was a great American and to me the outstanding statesman and citizen.. He does not belong just to the Democratic party. He belongs to the nation. There is no political significance in my speaking at this Jefferson day assembly. It is no different than were I to pay tribute to Abraham Lincoln."

There is no alliance existing between Farmer-Laborites and Democrats, and there will be none. Such an alliance exists only in the imagination of Republican editors and "rumper" Democratic politicians. Moreover, the Farmer-Labor party with its "production for use" program is capable of enlisting sufficient support without currying favor with old party politicians of any variety.

(The Nation)

At first sight the Wagner-Ellenbogen Housing bill seems a poor substitute for the type of housing legislation which the Administration has promised on numerous occasions. The total expenditure contemplated under the bill during a four-year interval is only $976,000,000, or $98 for each of the 10,000,000 families which Senator Wagner himself estimates to be in need of new housing facilities. Nevertheless, the bill is sound in that it represents the first carefully planned program for providing housing for the low-income groups in our pupulation. In order to make low rents possible the bill would authorize outright grants not to exceed 45 per cent of the construction costs, coupled with a government loan for the balance at an interest to be fixed by the housing authority which is to be repayable over a period of sixty years. A significant innovation is the recognition of "public housing societies" whose members are low-income families, as the sponsors and lessees of projects. This should not only stimulate the organization of local labor and consumer groups for housing, but also take the curse off federal ownership and administration where there is no local housing authority. Nearly all the organizations interested in low-cost housing are behind the bill, not because it is adequate, but because it represents the only hope of achieving anything at this session of Congress. Its chances of passage at this session are dependent entirely on the President's attitude, which is to say, they depend on the speed with which public pressure can be mobilized behind it.

DO YOU DO ANYTHING?
(The Challenge)

According to even the conservative estimates of the Office of Education of the U. S. Treasury Department, out of 20,100,000 persons 16 to 24 years of age, inclusive, in the United States today:

4,000,000 are known to be in full-time schools and colleges.

500,000 are known to be unemployed and doing part-time school work.

5,700 000 ARE KNOWN TO BE OUT OF A SCHOOL, UNEMPLOYED, AND SEEKING JOBS.

Twenty seven thousand dollars were spent for each person killed off during the World War. Might it not be cheaper this time to get rid of the unemployment instead of the unemployed?

SHARE CROPPERS TO COOPERATE
Farmers Independent (Bagley)

Sherwood Eddy, who has traveled widely and seen much, was appalled when he saw the terrible plight of the tenant farmers and share-croppers in the south. There, in the country's richest agricultural region, he found peonage, serfdom, poverty, disease, and sometimes terror and violence, says an article in the Literary Digest. He was arrested on vague charges of preaching communism, and, while under detention, heard planters tell "the truth about these damned niggers who won't work".

Mr. Eddy, who is a famed social worker writer and lecturer, lives to tell a tale and to start a 2,100-acre cotton cooperative experiment farm for evicted share-croppers in rich delta land near Hillhouse, Mississippi. The experiment calls for cooperative farming of the unit with profits to be divided on a pro-rata basis among the participants. Twenty families will take part in the cooperative venture this year. Each family will have its individual home, tho owned in common with all other families Personal effects will be owned individually. Each householder will have his own half-acre garden for raising vegetables. A consumers co-operative has been set up whereby the farmers will buy jointly at cost everything they can not provide for themselves.

FAVORS A THIRD PARTY

To the Editor:

According to an exchange reprinted in the Minneapolis Journal, republicans are now praying for a new national party to be effectively organized. If so, we farmer-laborites can certainly join them so far as Minnesota is concerned. The only republican, I believe, who wishes a new party to come in are those who have lost all faith in the ability of the rank and file of their party to control their national convention.

The rest of the republicans know that they would lose at least two votes for every one the democrats would lose in case a real live third national ticket and liberal platform was in the field. No, both old parties are more afraid of a real, live liberal national ticket in the field than anything else. In some states it would increase the winning chances of the democratic candidates and in others the chances of the republican candidate. But, in the nation, it would reduce the old party votes to such an extent that neither would get a majority, and then the election would be thrown into congress where the International Bankers might have trouble controlling, since the patronage lever could not operate until the president was selected.

It is reasonable to expect the coming presidential election to be thrown into the House of Representatives, and that will give the third party a splendid chance to bargain for concessions from the two major parties

Yours truly
ANDREW TROVATON

SWEDEN THE MIDDLE WAY

To the Editor:

The writer has had the pleasure to read, "Sweden The Middle Way" by Marquis W. Childs. When reading this splendid book one can not but look forward to a day when the Farmer-Labor forces can point to achievements like the co-operators, progressive planned government and labor unions have accomplished during the depression. When we read this book it seems like a story from another civilization where peace and order has prevailed, this does also apply to Norway, Finland and Denmark. As a contrast, on page 161, Mr. Childs points out that, in the United States the profit motive was put above every other consideration and it worked to the end of blind self destruction.

Beauty has not been forgotten, the applied arts have made great strides forward since 1920. Mr. Childs has pointed out that the slogan of the Swedish Arts and Crafts Society, is", More beautiful things for everyday life."

On page 124 we find the slogan of the Social Democratic Party of Sweden, "The same possibilities for living securely within the fatherland for all those who inhabit it."

All progressive men and women should read this book and learn what can be accoomplished by a planned social and industrial economy. The conservatives should read this book and learn that graft has been eliminated from some governments.

Yours truly,
C. E. HELLQUIST

CORRECTING AN ERROR

Minneapolis, Minn.,
April 14 1936

Editor Tri-County Forum,
Dear Aalbu:

A most unfortunate confusion prevails in connection with the proposed constitutional amendments. The vicious reactionary amendment which the forces of privilege are endeavoring to put over, which would make a sales tax almost inevitable in Minnesota and which the Farmer-Labor Convention declared against, is not Amendment No. 1 but Amendment No. 2. Amendment No. 1, which is intended to develop our state forests, is, in my opinion, a desirable amendment. It permits the exchange of state lands for federal lands.

It is necessary, if we are to proceed with our state forest development, that Amendment No. 1 should be adopted.

Amendment No. 2 was sponsored by the reactionary forces in the Legislature of 1935. The men and the interests behind it, are in favor of the sales tax and they are endeavoring to make a sales tax almost inevitable.

Minnesota has today, the best constitution on the subject of taxation, of any state in the union and the adoption of Amendment No. 2 should be opposed by every ounce of strength that we possess.

Amendment No. 2 is not necessary to accomplish the purpose that its supporters desire, as the legislature has the authority to do what it proposes, if the legislature so desires

Yours sincerely
S. A. STOCKWELL,
Representative 32nd District.

INFLATION AND RECOVERY

By Maynard C. Krueger

To the extent to which inflation brings a temporary increase in exports, it will revive certain export industries and put more people to work. Experience has shown, however, that this revival is only temporary.

Inflation will not solve the problem of the business cycle. Inflation and deflation are a part of the business cycle. There wouldn't be any business cycle without them. It is impossible to have deflation without inflation over any very long period, and it is impossible to have inflation without it being followed by deflation. The ups and downs of the business cycle are inherent in the capitalist system and cannot be abolished without the abolition of capitalism.

Admission of Failure

If the Administration goes in very much for inflation as a means of remedying the depression, it will simply be admitting that all other measures have failed. What usually happens is that a capitalist government, trying to maintain itself, trys first one thing and then another without really tackling the root of the depression problem, and when it becomes evident that these half-way measures are not producing results, inflation develops out of the confusion.

Inflation has been tried in practically every country in Europe. It has never succeeded in solving a depression problem. During the early part of an inflation period there is usually feverish business activity which creates the illusion of prosperity, during the latter part, however, there is such uncertainty concerning the future that business men refuse to make any commitments and business comes practically to a standstill.

Must Tackle Base

There is no country in the world in which people have been more given to the practice of trying to remedy the evils of capitalist system by tinkering with money than in the United States. Money and credit are simply a medium of exchange. There is no sound system of money and credit that can be operated successfully in an economic system which is unsound at its very base. G. D. H Cole recently said in an article in the American Socialist Quarterly:

"It is impossible to lay down in advance the working of the money machine under economic conditions so different from those of capitalism as we socialists are seeking to establish. What we can say plainly is first, that we mean to take the entire financial machine into our hands as an indispensable instrument of our economic policy - and still more as certain to wreck our economic policy if we were to leave it in private hands - and secondly that we are under no delusion that we can make the world prosperous merely by printing more currency or manufacturing additional supplies of credit. Our task is to socialize the machinery of production, and to bring the fixing of both prices and incomes firmly under socialist control, using the money machine as a subordinate instrument in the process of socialized production and social exchange, but not mistaking the money tickets which are used in the exchange of goods and services for anything more than they are. We have to make money the servant instead of the master of the economic world."

ON THE ROAD TO WAR

America is again on the road to war. The greatest peace-time war preparations in the history of this world are now under way in these United States. No nation at any time in the history of the world has ever indulged in such tremendous building for war. War for what? War against whom? Who is going to attack us? Oh, yes, I see. We are going to deliver the deciding blow on other Continents, Asia, Europe or Africa. Our army is to be the Policeman of the earth. We are going to decide for other nations how they are going to govern themselves. A most dangerous and destructive international policy which will bring the downfall of any nation which presumes such a policy. Every nation and every empire in the world attempting anything like that went crashing into the dust of the ages.

We want America to live. We need only such preparations as will defend our own soil. Thrusting ourselves into the quarrels of other nations will never settle those quarrels and will only injure ourselves.

We are again on the road to war We traveled that road nineteen years ago. Speak now before it is too late.

COLOSSAL BLUNDER

April 6th, 1917 we went to war, they said, "To Save the World for Democracy; to put an end to all wars; to erect a League of Nation structure with a sovereignty over our sovereignty; a flag over our flag", inevitably imposing dictation from Europe. Not a single Congressman or Senator can be found who will rise on the floor and defend his voting for war. Selfish, ignorant and stupid men plunged America into the abyss of the World War. We financed that War and brought America's financial structure into collapse and chaos and in its train we have fifteen million unemployed and twenty million on relief, and dark days ahead.

It was a privilege to have stood on the floor of the House of Representatives on that good Friday morning, April 6, 1917, voting 'No' against this colossal blunder.

America will work its way out. Of that I am sure, but we must not make that blunder again, lest we may not work our way out another time. It may then be forever too late. The Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, Lincoln foreign policy is the North Star of our foreign affairs. It ought to be good enough for any real red-blooded American.

ECONOMY LEGISLATION

There is tremendous pressure for economy, and yet the millions of unemployed must not starve. There must be billions for relief and billions for the unemployed. Right straight through this entire crisis, those who affiliated with the group of which your Representative from the 3rd District belongs, have urged public works, constructive works built upon thorough engineering principles, nation-wide construction of housing and resettlement, rather than meaningless relief expenditures on trifling enterprises. We have always advocated intelligent national planning This was ignored and we rushed into this crisis unprepared. Now let us build for the future and let us build a structure of which our children will be proud.

61 PERCENT FOR WAR

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, the U. S. Government spent 61c for war preparations out of every dollar paid by the taxpayer, thus leaving only 39c for all the other expenses of the Government

Minute Sermon

By Dr. Crawford Grays

The great purpose of Christ's visit to earth was to bring the Kingdom of God, (of Good), to earth. To do this He undertook to make better conditions. He espoused the cause of the weak and opposed those who were responsible for bad social conditions. The weak and the friendless ever found in Him a helper and defender. Most of His time was devoted to those who most needed His care. He worked along the motivating power of love, justice and mercy.

About the beginning of His ministry He visited Nazareth where He was raised; He went into the synagogue and read to the people from Isaiah His commission from the Father as follows:

"The spirit of the Lord is upon me because He hath appointed me to preach the Gospel to the poor; He hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, recovery of sight to the blind, and set at liberty them that are bruised." His church must successfully meet the test of oneness with its Lord in His mission, labor and attainment, otherwise it has no justification for existence as a Christian church.

The Washington Commentator

By E. C. Stengelson

HISTORY

"With his retirement from the office of President of the United States, the country has been delivered from a tyrant and an impostor!"

The remark thus quoted is not a prediction of what the Republicans, or their playmates, the Liberty Leaguers, will exclaim when President Roosevelt's administration comes to an end, either this coming winter or 4 years thereafter.

It was the newspaper comment of the political 'outs' when George Washington's second term expired.

* * * *

"If he is elected President, the Bible will be cast into a bonfire and our country turned over to a mob of atheistical, murderous Jacobins!"

This was the prediction of the head of one of America's leading colleges. But it is not one of the dire prophecies heard in 1932 of Roosevelt's candidacy . . . Though it does have a sound somewhat reminiscent of the "grass will be growing in the streets of our cities if Roosevelt is elected" which we heard in that campaign.

It was a remark made about Thomas Jefferson by Timothy Dwight, president of Yale College, when Jefferson ran for the presidency in 1800.

* * * *

"The President's opinion of what is constitutional is just as good as the Supreme Courts!"

Nor is this a quotation of a remark by Franklin D. Roosevelt, despite the numerous accusations against him that he is desirous of destroying the power of the Supreme Court.

It is what Andrew Jackson said when he vetoed the famous 'Bank Bill' in 1832 after the Supreme Court had decided that Congress had power to enact it into law

Andrew Jackson has gone down in history as one of the greatest presidents the United States has ever had. But his political opponents of the time, the 'Whigs' (corresponding somewhat to the Republican Party of today) saw him in an entirely different light . . .

They said he was not a true leader, but a demagogue.

That he threatened the Republic by his lust for one-man power.

* * * *

The Conservatives claim they are fully as progressive as the Liberals, the difference being wholly in their favor—that they proceed more cautiously and sanely. Too often, however, they remind one of the lazy lumberjack. . .

With the aid of a cross-cut saw, he and his sweating partner were cutting a huge log in two. The lazy one put no more effort into the task than was needed to hold his end of the saw in an upright position.

The partner stood it as long as he could. Finally, in exasperation, he exclaimed . . .

"I don't mind it so much that you're ridin' the saw but you might at least quit draggin' your feet!"

* * * *

Yes . . . it is to radical thought that the world is indebted for its progress. Had it been obliged to rely on those who 'drag their feet', humanity would probably still be crawling on all four and talking in grunts.

VIEWS AND REVIEWS

By Ben C. Hagglund

Why a National Farmer-Labor Party?

The need for a national Farmer-Labor party is evident to everyone, for without it, concerted action on the Frazier-Lundeen bill, the National Youth bill, and other constructive legislation is impossible, while civil liberties and labor progress remain without a voice in national affairs.

The time for a national Farmer-Labor party is now—before one of our ever-present demagogues evolves another "cure" for the mess we're in. Popular fancy, disappointed in the New Deal, and skeptical of the Old, may flock to the third-party idea by the millions. Four years from now will be too late. Many think that by that time, unless a Farmer-Labor party has won considerable power in the government, we shall have fascism.

Without a Farmer-Labor party, war and fascism will have a free hand. Just try it—once!

—O—

The Spirit of Tom Jefferson

Among all the public men who honored the anniversary of Thomas Jefferson's birthday last week, very few of them mentioned his now famous saying about the tree of liberty being watered by the blood of tyrants from time to time, and that a free country should have a revolution every twenty years! However, much was said about "Jeffersonian Democracy" and very few of them seemed to know just what the phrase meant. Among those present were Al ("Jeff") Smith, Father ("Tom") Coughlin, Gov. Eugene ("T. J.") Talmadge, and others And if the spirit of Tom Jefferson were present, it must have been mighty uncomfortable.

—O—

There's a Difference!

The capitalist press said, in regard to "Stakhanovism," the industrial renaissance in Russia: "Aha! So the Soviets have gone capitalistic and are practicing the speed-up system!"

Aside from the fact that it is something for capitalist newspapers to admit that we DO have a speed-up system in the U. S. A., what a difference there is between the two systems of speed-up!

In the U. S. A., a man who becomes pace-maker on a chain is regarded as something of a sap, because all he gets for his increased exertions is a cut in piece-work price, and then if he fails to keep up to his self-established speed, he gets a kick in the pants.

In the Soviet Union, the man who turns out better work and more of it than his fellow workmen is regarded as Public Hero No. 1, and he is further rewarded in increased wages. There, it seems people get paid for working, not for the amount of graft they can pull down.

—O—

How Not to Treat the Working Class

By trampling a person underfoot you make an implacable foe. Repression is a poor way to relieve pressure.

The Philippine Islands are suffering a siege of repression under Manuel Quezon, small time dictator backed by American interests His present tactics are to smash all labor unions. As a consequence, is the labor question settled there? The following table of strikes speaks for itself:

Year	No. Strikes	No. Strikers
1932	31	4,396
1933	59	8,066
1934	63	27,662

This laboratory study, as it were, indicates the result of a fascist dictatorship. Pressure is not reduced by repression.

Special emphasis is laid on the orders having to do with the operators of the state-owned ferries for as the reporter explains, "Kentucky is crisscrossed by ten navigable rivers and their tributaries, and ferries are almost as numerous as bridges." The state employes operating ferries "not only have been warned as to their individual conduct, but have been instructed not to permit the congregation of drinking persons at the ferry landings".

COULD.. . SCARE HIM

A small boy stood in the entrance of the cobbler's shop watching the man at work.

"What do you repair boots with, mister?" he suddenly asked.

"Hide," replied the cobbler sharply.

"E-r-r, eh?" asked the boy.

"I said hide," replied the cobbler impatiently.

"What for?" the boy insisted, somewhat surprised.

"Hide! The cow's outside," sighed the man.

"Don't care if it is. Who's afraid of a cow, anyway?" said the youngster defiantly.—Boston Globe.

Peace at All Costs

At last he had succeeded in gaining an interview with the eminent editor.

"I have a poem here advocating peace," he said heavily.

The editor picked it up.

"I suppose," he said, after a while, "that you yourself honestly and sincerely desire peace?"

"Most decidedly," said the poet.

"Then burn the poem," advised the editor smoothly.—Answers Magazine.

"I called to ask your permission to pay my addresses to your daughter with a view to asking for her hand in marriage."

"Go ahead," replied Mr. Comrox, "only I'm afraid a man with your ideas of courtship will be wasting his time."

No Time Lost

"How're you getting along," asked the plumber putting in a belated appearance to mend the broken water pipe.

"Not so bad," replied the man of the house. "I taught my wife to swim while we were waiting for you."

Really!

Curious Old Lady—Why, you've lost your leg, haven't you?

Cripple—Well, I'll be darned if I haven't!

Wit and Humor

COULDN'T SCARE HIM

A small boy stood in the entrance of the cobbler's shop watching the man at work.

"What do you repair boots with, mister?" he suddenly asked.

"Hide," replied the cobbler sharply.

"E-r-r, eh?" asked the boy.

"I said hide," replied the cobbler impatiently.

"What for?" the boy insisted somewhat surprised.

"Hide! The cow's outside," sighed the man.

"Don't care if it is. Who's afraid of a cow, anyway?" said the youngster defiantly.—Boston Globe.

Peace at All Costs

At last he had succeeded in gaining an interview with the eminent editor.

"I have a poem here advocating peace," he said heavily.

The editor picked it up.

"I suppose," he said, after a while, "that you yourself honestly and sincerely desire peace?"

"Most decidedly," said the poet.

"I called to ask your permission to pay my addresses to your daughter with a view to asking for her hand in marriage."

"Go ahead," replied Mr. Comrox, "only I'm afraid a man with your ideas of courtship will be wasting his time."

No Time Lost

"How're you getting along," asked the plumber putting in a belated appearance to mend the broken water pipe.

"Not so bad," replied the man of the house. "I taught my wife to swim while we were waiting for you."

Really!

GIANT EGG UNEARTHED IN 8 FOOT GRAVEL BED

New Richmond—Unimpeachable proof that Horse Shoe Lake, one mile south of Richmond, was at one time inhabited by enormous prehistoric animals was discovered by the unearthing of an egg 12 inches in diameter. This egg was found by men hauling gravel eight feet beneath the surface. Only the shell was left in perfect shape, but crumpled to dust after being exposed to the air. The men did not stop their work to figure out whether the egg was deposited by a dinosaur, a sea turtle or some giant lizard, or whether the time was one or two million years ago. They agreed that it was a job for the geologists and chronologists respectively

The Junior class has had its mystery play in rehearsal for some time. It is an entirely different play from what has been produced here recently.

The Senior class play, "Campus Quarantine" was exceptionally well received by a large audience last Friday night. Interest in the play was sustained all through the performance and the audience enjoyed the humor and the awkward situations in which the quarantine of the sorority house placed the boys working their way through college. Effects, properties, and costumes added much to the color of the play and its attractiveness.

Roy Hayden, of the Junior class accompanied by Miss Swenseid, played two violin solos between the first and second act, while Carol Hoyland of the Sophomore class sang two character songs between the second and third act.

[illegible] last Friday night. Interest in the play was sustained all through the performance and the audience enjoyed the humor and the awkward situations in which the quarantine of the sorority house placed the boys, working their way through college. Effects, properties, and costumes added much to the color of the play and its attractiveness. Roy Hayden of the Junior class accompanied by Miss Swenseid, played two violin solos between the first and second acts, while Carol Hovland of the Sophomore class sang two character songs between the second and third act.

CAUGHT IN THE WILD

WNU SERVICE

The rifleman up on the edge of the tundra was off to the right of the stream. Garth knew he had a thick screen of spruce trees and scrub all the way to timberline. As he climbed, the man above began to yell and halloo. Garth had no doubt that the fellow was shouting about the outdrift of the cabin plane.

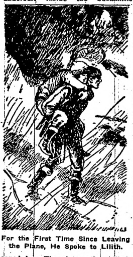
Before long, other yells came from the lake shore. They were followed by rifle shots. It was easy to guess that one or more of the pursuers had sighted the plane and opened fire, on the supposition that Garth was hiding in the cockpit.

Garth moderated his rush. Even so, his steady uphill slogging brought him near timberline before the four men got together down at the lake shore.

For the first time since leaving the plane, he spoke to Lilith: "Try holding out further from my neck, Miss Ramill. We're safe enough now. We're climbing faster than they can wade the drifts."

With less than a hundred paces, Garth saw a whitish pall surge out from the down-rolling clouds on the western mountain side. A snow-spitting wind-gust whooshed aslant the tundra slope. He turned sharp to the left and headed uphill towards the foot of the glacier. Before he had covered another hundred paces, the air was thick with snow.

Fortunately for Lilith, the storm was only an early autumn blizzard, not a 30 or 40 below zero gale of the subarctic winter. The rabbit-fur undersuit inside the buckskins saved her. Though greatly chilled, she was only slightly frostbitten when Garth reached the brink of the lateral moraine, a little below the foot of the glacier.



For the First Time Since Leaving the Plane, He Spoke to Lilith.

He went out across the rock-strewn gulch bed. Within a few moments Lilith suddenly found herself out of the wind and snow and the white gloom of the storm. She could not see.

A match flared in Garth's upraised hand. The light glinted and sparkled on ice walls. She was in the mouth of the cave, up inside the glacier-stream tunnel. The rock floor was heaped with the caribou meat. At the side of the entrance lay the pothole stone that Garth had made into an Eskimo lamp.

He pointed to an outspread caribou skin. "Crawl in on that. Then rub your face and pound yourself."

She scrambled to the skin mat, her teeth clenched on her lip to keep from crying out from the pain of her ankle. Garth had struck another match and held it to the moss wick of the stone lamp.

Lilith had already rubbed her frost-whitened cheeks and nose into a glow. He laid his belt-ax on a hind-quarter of caribou, and smiled at her in the growing light of the wick.

"Chop off a shank or two. We'll need bone spits," he said. "But first warm some of the other skins and wrap them around you. Also put more fat in the lamp. I'll be gone two or three hours."

Over near the far end of the glacier front, he found a drift with a four-inch crust packed by the drive of the wind during the previous snowstorm. He went at it like an Eskimo, slashing out big domino-shaped blocks with his knife.

After he had gathered a high pile of the blocks on a fairly level spot just beyond the drift, he started to cut others and lay them edgewise in a circular wall around the pile. Two feet up he began to lean the blocks inward.

By the end of three hours, he stood in the blackness of a snow beehive, half a foot higher than his head and over seven feet across at the floor level.

Low down in the wall he cut a hole. There was little more than space enough between the igloo and the glacier front for him to crawl out. He circled around the snow dome and the big drift, through the thick swirl of snow, and recrossed the stream.

In the cave he found Lilith furbundled and hovering over the lamp, as she broiled thawed caribou steaks on a shank-bone spit. He picked the girl up in her skin wrappings, and carried her out and around to the igloo, then went back for the rest of the skins, the lamp and some of the meat.

While she went on with her cooking, over the re-lighted lamp, he cut more blocks and built a low entrance tunnel from the door to part way around the curve of the igloo wall. When he backed in, he blocked the mouth of the tunnel with a snow slab.

The inside of the igloo was already so warm from the lamp heat that the inside of the dome roof was beginning to soften. But Garth knew there was no slightest danger of it falling in. As fast as the snow melted, the moisture was sucked outwards. It met the cold of the outside air and froze hard.

The girl had a stack of caribou steaks broiled for him. He sat down, without a word, and began to eat. In the midst of the meal the smoke and heat became so stifling that he had to cut a two-inch ventilation hole in the roof.

All the time he gave no sign that he perceived the look of misery in Lilith's eyes. But when he had eaten his fill, he spoke a sudden order: "Bare your foot."

She obeyed, tensely silent. He looked close at the swollen ankle in the lamplight and felt it with his finger tips. Easy as was his touch, Lilith gasped with pain. But he smiled his relief.

"No broken bone or dislocation; only a sprain. You'll soon be all right. Start packing it with softened snow. Keep it as cold as you can without freezing."

At that, all her pent-up emotion burst out: "Oh, how you must despise me! Get you into this frightful danger—then go lame! A helpless, useless drag on you! That beastly coward—he'll hunt you out . . . murder you like the poor policeman. And all my fault!"

Garth shook his head. "You take too much of the credit, Miss Ramill. So far as regards Constable Dillon, the result would have been the same if you had stayed at Fort Simpson."

"But—but you can't get away!"

Garth's smile hardened. "Neither can they. Now tend to your ankle. I'm going for meat."

He dressed and crawled out into the storm. When at last he came back in, he had brought nearly half of the caribou meat from the ice cave and stacked it around the igloo. He had also set up blocks of snow-crust to shape a drift of new snow in a certain way.

He unrolled the thawed wolverine pelt and showed a big hank of catgut. With his knife he started to shape caribou skins for parkas and trousers. Lilith's eyes brightened. She softened a length of catgut in the melted lampfat, and asked for a needle.

All the remainder of that day of death and storm, both of them plied awl and buckskin needle and catgut thread. Neither was an Eskimo seamstress. But their stitches, though coarse, were strong. By nightfall they finished the first caribou-skin suit—waistlong sockleggings, and parka with hood-front fringed with wolverine fur.

After another meal of broiled meat, Garth went out and climbed the lateral moraine to gather a quantity of caribou moss from between the snowdrifts on the wind swept tundra.

When he returned, Lilith lay asleep on one of the uncut skins. She had sunk down, completely tired out. Garth covered her over, blocked the roof hole with a chunk of soft snow, and spread his own skin mat on the other side of the lamp from the girl. He lay down on it and snuffled out the light.

CHAPTER X

The Bedeviling

LILITH opened her eyes as Garth finished his hasty meal of lamp-seared meat and fat. He explained his plans to her. Her hands clutched together until they whitened.

"You—you'll be careful?"

"Never fear. I'll come back to look out for you. The storm has blown out. Clear sky and about ten below zero. Keep treating your ankle and work on your suit."

"But—how long?—"

He handed her the knife, but took the belt-ax. "If I'm not back soon, it will not be till late afternoon or after dark. They may turn out early, like myself, to have a look at their plane. In that case, I'll have to hide out all day."

"You'll freeze."

That won a smile from him. "This is an Eskimo rig. I've sat in one for hours before a seal hole, at 40 below zero. Finish your suit, and crawl out to enjoy the frost. Only, be careful of that ankle. When outside, keep close to the igloo, and duck inside if you see anyone else than myself."

She flung out her hands. "Oh, if only I could go along to help! I'm so afraid he'll find you. All those guns—he and his men—you, empty-handed!"

Garth met the almost frantic outburst with a look of cool irony. "Do you take me for a chechahco? Mark this—that scoundrel Huxby is the man who's in danger."

With this assurance, Garth crept out through the tunnel, shoving his snowshoes ahead of him. Snow had continued to fall after the wind had died down. That meant easy tracking. In the dim starlight, he had to guess at the covering of his trail to the stream channel.

During the night, the last dwindling flow had choked the channel with anchor ice, had flooded over the snow, and frozen solid. Garth took off his snowshoes and crept across the glare ice without leaving any marks.

On the other bank, he plowed a heavy trail up into the ice tunnel, and brought from the storage cave one of the remaining legs of caribou. He left the meat atop the moraine, and started down the tundra as fast as he could travel by starlight.

Dawn was graying over the east mountain wall of the valley when he neared the lake. He crossed over the frozen ford and went to peer at the three-seater plane in the growing twilight. It stood much higher than he had left it.

A close view showed that the engineer and his men had managed to raise the craft above water by cribbing logs under the shattered pontoons. The top logs of the crib brought the bottom of the floats level with the thickening skim ice. Long poles had been set to brace the wings against the wind gusts.

Garth swung aboard. As he expected, all the food had been taken away. So also had been the breaker points from the magneto. Huxby no doubt had figured that the canoe builder might repair the floats with rawhide, and run away with the three-seater. To balk the engineer, in turn, Garth helped himself to the breaker cam.

He jumped back on the bank, and mushed eastward along the shore in the dim grayness. At first, thickets of alders and willows cut off all view of the lake. He did not trouble to seek an opening until he had covered a half mile. There he came to a remembered stretch of partly open bank.

Though the gray dawn had grown a little less faint, he peered for several moments without sighting the cabin plane. It seemed as if its pontoons much have been sawed through by the sharp-edged sheet of ice, so that the aircraft had foundered in deep water.

But then he made out vaguely a white shape against the white of the snow-covered ice. A short dash brought him close to the grounded plane. It lay in shallow water, surrounded by freezing slush. The blizzard had hit the lake hard enough to break up the sheet ice and crack it into pieces too small to grind through the sides of the pontoons.

The plane had been driven across into this corner of the lake, along with the sludge. The shoreward-swung tail was only a biscuit toss out from the solid bank. Garth hastened to fetch small trunks and pieces of rotted logs from the down timber under the nearest trees. By tossing out chunks of logs on the snow-covered sludge and bog, he was able to make a slender foot-bridge with pairs of trunks.

The last extension proved touch and go. Cross pieces and stringers drove down under his weight into the sludge-filled water and the mud beneath! But he had made a dash for it. His hands clutched hold of the rudder before he could sink.

CO-OPERATIVE NEWS NOTES

The Cooperative Wholesale Association of Southern California, eight-month-old buying center for 60 co-operative stores and buying clubs in and near Los Angeles, reported a total business of $40,000 since its inception at its second quarterly meeting, February 28. The present cooperative development in California, stimulated by the economic discussions in the recent Sinclair campaign, is slightly over a year old. Individual cooperative discussion groups, buying clubs and consumers' cooperative stores, drawn together under the leadership of the California Cooperative Council, federated to set up the present wholesale which began with a volume of less than a thousand dollars a month and has developed to a present volume thirteen times that size.

The Pacific Supply Cooperative, headquarters Walla Walla, Wash., organized a little over two years ago, reported a non-profit business running close to a million dollars at its annual meeting here, February 20 and 21. Sixty retail cooperatives in Oregon, Washington and Idaho are members of the co-op wholesale which distributed 7,000,000 gallons of gasoline, 108,000 gallons of lubricating oil, 700,000 gallons of diesel and stove oil, and $40 000 worth of miscellaneous goods, including tires, batteries, feeds and other farm supplies in 1935.

Pacific Supply Cooperative is affiliated with National Cooperatives, Inc., a federation of ten regional cooperatives in the U. S. which purchases "Co-op" label goods on contract for more than 500,000 members of affiliated cooperatives.

In the United States where only one out of eight farm homes is wired for electricity, electric service was extended to 85,000 additional farms in 1935. In spite of this extension 85 percent of the rural population is still dependent on kerosene or gasoline, lamps or candles. Rebelling at the failure of private profit companies to extend adequate power service to rural areas, hundreds of thousands of farmers have organized electrification cooperatives to use Rural Electrification Administration loans to build their own lines.

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor declared editorially in the March issue of the American Federationist that while union-sponsored consumers' co-operatives had been more highly succesful in Europe than in America they offer "better goods services and prices" by eliminating what now constitutes the profits business. "Retail cooperatives become increasingly effective as the cooperative principle is carried back to the wholesaler and then to the producers" declared the Federationist.

days of cloudy weather. Their lowest temperature was seventy-five degrees above zero. The average temperature was between 80 degrees and 84 degrees above, while during the last two weeks of their stay, the mercury rose as high as ninety degrees above zero in the shade, Mr. Bothun stated.

While in California, Mr. and Mrs. Bothun visited with several former residents, at Oakland and Berkeley they visited with the Gust Steen, Hans Langseth, Paul Lind, Melgaard, and Mons Bothun families. They visited with Dr. and Mrs. Gamble at Willis, and with Mr. and Mrs. Dusenbury (Ada Clements) of Loomis, and with other friends.

While in California they saw the great Bay Bridge, seven and one-half miles in length, which is considered one of the greatest structures in the world. Here Mr. Bothun also went on a tour of inspection of a ship sailing for Honolulu, the first ocean-going vessel Mr. Bothun had ever seen.

Mr. Bothun was very much impressed by historic old Mexico. He and Mrs. Bothun spent a few days in the old city of Juarez, with its huge market squares and its quaint customs. They visited an old Spanish mission built four hundred years ago.

Mr. and Mrs. Bothun are planning to build a home in this city sometime soon, and have brought back with them from their trip many plans for the designing of their home.

Wolf Democrats Show Power in State Meet

Pennington County Reprented by Full Delegation; County Convention Praises New Deal; Maruska Chairman for 2 Years

The Wolf democrats exhibited a tremendous strength at the state convention held in the St. Paul auditorium Tuesday, there being over 2,000 delegates from all sections of the state present. A complete slate of delegates to the national convention was selected and moves made to file candidates for all state offices in the primary election to be held June 15th.

In the meantime the Moonan-Regan faction are threatening court action, injunctions and what not in order to keep the Wolfmen from taking the issue before the voters in the June election.

Representing Pennington county at the convention were delegates chosen at the county convention here on last Thursday as follows: James Cosgrove Mrs. A. J. Rau, S. E. Hunt, Andy Anderson, H. O. Chommie, Alfred M. Johnson, Curtis Eshelby, Gunder Twete, Ed. Kusmack, Ed Singer, John Sundquist, Joe Patton, Oscar Gunstad, Adolph Setterberg, and John Morgan.

Pennington county committee for the next two years are: Joe Maruska, chairman; James Cosgrove, secretary-treasurer H. O. Chommie, 1st vice chairman and Curtis Eshelby, 2nd vice chairman.

Unqualified endorsement of President Franklin D. Roosevelt and the New Deal were voiced in resolutions adopted by the Pennington county convention. The resolution recalls as a "nightfare the conditions of agriculture, prostrate and without hope, crushed by a criminal price level, when hunger, desolation, and abject poverty prevailed in a country capable of producing plenty for all; when the rules of finance and industry admitted their utter inability to cope with the situation; when thousands of young men and boys were forced to take to the road as tramps and hobos; when hopelessness and desperation reigned thruout the land. We recall the rapid change that came about in the spirit and conditions of the people of the country after March 4th, 1933."

The resolution lists some of the various steps that have been taken by the federal administration to meet the crisis of the depression and pledges the loyalty and support of Pennington county democrats to Roosevelt and the men that have supported him in their efforts on behalf of all the people as opposed to the forces of monopoly and special privileges.

H. O. Chommie was elected chairman of the convention and Miss Marie Wise, convention secretary.

which dividends amounting to 23 percent have been paid. Some other assets still remain to be sold or collected

The building was built in 1914 at a cost of about $85,000 exclusive of the cost of the site and is two floors with basement, is of re-inforced concrete construction thruout and brick veneered. It is believed to be the best constructed building in the city, and is 75 by 116 feet. The second floor contains the former Elks Hall and nine office suites except one of which are occupied. Three store quarters on the ground floor are occupied by the Peoples Cooperative Store, Leins Popular Price Store and Thief River Pharmacy. Corner quarters formerly occupied by the post office is the only vacant space. The basement contains the DuChamp Bowling Alleys, The Forum Publishing Company, and the Brattland Insurance agency. The building is stated to bring a revenue of around $600 per month.

Details of organizing the depositors for the purpose of purchasing the building were arranged by J. F. Landy of the state banking department with the assistance of Gilbert Brattland, deputy examiner in charge of liquidation.

pointed a committee on credentials. Following the report of the credentials committee and its adoption, R. M. Aalbu was unanimously elected convention chairman and Mr Synnes convention secretary. The convention was addressed by W. E. Day and J. O. Melby. A short address was also given by Hubert Brown.

The selection of a district committee followed a thorough discussion of the proposition of a district campaign committee to coordinate the work of the campaign. It was decided that this committee in cooperation with the county committees are to synchronize the routing of speakers, and generally assist in organizing the district for a thorough and efficient campaign to elect the entire farmer-labor slate from U. S. senator to state representatives.

Resolutions were adopted commending the actions of the state farmer-labor convention and the candidates it nominated and the platform adopted as well as a commendation of the action of the 9th district convention in endorsing R. T. Buckler for reelection to congress.

Resettlement

eral government adjunct and taxes will be paid on them, the report states. All buildings will be constructed by the WPA and they will be built to government specifications, and will set a high standard for farm homes.

These farms will be leased for a period of from three to five years to selected farmers from the Beltrami Island and Mud Lake restoration areas, and will not be sold until the tenant has demonstrated capacity for management and farming ability When this has been demonstrated they will be sold if the tenant desires to purchase on easy payments spread out over a forty year period. The interest rate will not exceed 4 1-2 percent. The original cost will not be considered in fixing the price of these farms to the settlers the report states. The purchase price will be fixed on a basis of earning power determined by a ten year average of yield and prices.

At the present time it is hoped that this land can be secured in Pennington and adjoining counties and options must be closed before June 15th the report states. This project is not to be confused with colonization projects such as are being launched in some parts of the country, resettlement officials say. In this instance the farms will be located as near as possible to the present community centers such as Grygla, Goodridge, St. Hilaire and others and will be a definite aid in building and maintaining those communities and their present cooperative creameries and other activities. The farms will be of such size, 40, 80, or 160 acres as may be conveniently handled by one family and the size of them will depend upon soil conditions and other factors that may have a bearing on the type of farming; dairying, grain raising and so on, that the farm may be adapted to.

BENSON WINS IN FIGHT FOR SEED LOANS TO FARMS

President Roosevelt Abrogates Earlier Order and Loan Order Results

Elmer A Benson, Minnesota's junior senator, led the fight which was successful last week, in obtaining seed loan relief for some 23,000 Minnesota farmers, who had faced a desperate situation, following an earlier veto of the seed loan bill by President Roosevelt.

As a result of negotiations begun and carried on by Senator Benson, President Roosevelt abrogated an earlier order and funds were assured for seed loans to the many thousands of farmers who faced loss of their land, machinery, livestock and homes in the event that they could receive no seed loans for this planting season

Senator Benson working with Senator Burton K. Wheeler of Montana, carried on the fight for three weeks, communicating with President Roosevelt by cable and by telegraph to the President's home at Warm Springs, Ga., to apprise him of the gravity of the situation and demonstrate the necessity of the release of seed loan funds to farmers barred from receiving such aid by technicalities in the regulations of the Farm Credit Administration and the Rural Resettlement administration.

Conferences between heads, of these agencies and Budget Director Bell, finally resulted in the release of $27,000,000 additional.

Included in these additional funds is seven million dollars from the funds of the RRA and 10 millions in new money to be set aside from the budget for additional crop production loans.

Most of the money will be allocated for loans to farmers in Minnesota, North and South Dakota Wisconsin, Nebraska and Montana.

Game Reports Must Be Sent by Hunters

The division of game and fish calls attention to the fact that only 21 percent of the hunters who obtained licenses last year have made their game reports to the department. Of the 213,487 hunting licenses sold during 1935 only 43,864 have been returned, the department states.

Leo Peyton, game warden, states that in Pennington county where 603 licenses were sold, to date of April 10th only 137 had been returned. In Red Lake county where 304 licenses were sold only 102 have been returned 23 percent and 34 percent respectively.

Mr. Peyton calls attention of the hunters to the fact that the law provides that these licenses must be returned to the department whether or not the owner killed any game. He reminds the hunters that they may be refused a license next year if the return is not made. The license returns are used by the department in recording the state game census and serve a very definite purpose in the work of the department. Persons interested in game and conservation can assist in the work by reminding gun club members and sportsmen's clubs of the necessity of returning the licenses.

WPA PAY DAYS ARE FIXED ON NEW SCHEDULE

New System Will Speed Up the Payment of Wages to WPA Workers

To facilitate and speed up payment of wages to WPA workers, a system of grouping pay dates has been authorized by Victor Christgau, state administrator, according to announcement made by C. W. Anderson, acting director for the seventh district of the Works Progress Administration.

The new procedure will mean that WPA workers will receive their checks on the seventh day following the close of each semi-monthly payroll period, instead of the tenth day. The finance department, of which Waldemar Thorson is supervisor, has divided the district into four areas, each with a separate pay date.

"This change has made it necessary to issue checks for less than the usual figures," Mr. Thorson stated, "to cover the short period between the close of the old pay period and the beginning of the new period. After the first partial check has been received, the usual checks will be received regularly every two weeks on the same dates. The only exception will be when the pay dates fall on a Saturday Sunday or holiday when they will be distributed on the next regular working day."

The areas and the pay days for the project workers will be as follows:

Area 1—Beltrami and Clearwater counties, 5th and 20th of each month.

Area 2—Polk, Pennington, Red Lake, Clay, Norman and Mahnomen, 8th and 23rd.

Area 3—Becker, Roseau, Lake of the Woods, Kittson and Marshall 12th and 27th.

Area 4—Otter Tail, Wilkin and NYA, 16th and 1st.

days of cloudy weather. Their lowest temperature was seventy-five degrees above zero. The average temperature was between 80 degrees and 84 degrees above, while during the last two weeks of their stay, the mercury rose as high as ninety degrees above zero in the shade, Mr. Bothun stated.

While in California, Mr. and Mrs. Bothun visited with several former residents, at Oakland and Berkeley they visited with the Gust Steen, Hans Langseth, Paul Lind, Melgaard, and Mons Bothun families. They visited with Dr. and Mrs. Gamble at Willis, and with Mr. and Mrs. Dusenbury (Ada Clements) of Loomis, and with other friends.

While in California they saw the great Bay Bridge, seven and one-half miles in length, which is considered one of the greatest structures in the world. Here Mr. Bothun also went on a tour of inspection of a ship sailing for Honolulu, the first ocean-going vessel Mr. Bothun had ever seen.

Mr. Bothun was very much impressed by historic old Mexico. He and Mrs. Bothun spent a few days in the old city of Juarez, with its huge market squares and its quaint customs. They visited an old Spanish mission built four hundred years ago.

Wolf Democrats Show Power in State Meet

Pennington County Reprented by Full Delegation; County Convention Praises New Deal; Maruska Chairman for 2 Years

The Wolf democrats exhibited a tremendous strength at the state convention held in the St. Paul auditorium Tuesday, there being over 2,000 delegates from all sections of the state present. A complete slate of delegates to the national convention was selected and moves made to file candidates for all state offices in the primary election to be held June 15th.

In the meantime the Moonan-Regan faction are threatening court action, injunctions and what not in order to keep the Wolfmen from taking the issue before the voters in the June election.

Representing Pennington county at the convention were delegates chosen at the county convention here on last Thursday as follows: James Cocgrove Mrs. A. J. Rau, S. E. Hunt, Andy Anderson, H. O. Chommie, Alfred M. Johnson, Curtis Eshelby, Gunder Twete, Ed. Kusmack, Ed Singer John Sundquist, Joe Patton, Oscar Gunstad, Adolph Setterberg, and John Morgan.

Pennington county committee for the next two years are: Joe Maruska, chairman; James Cosgrove, secretary-treasurer H. O. Chommie, 1st vice chairman and Curtis Eshelby, 2nd vice chairman.

Unqualified endorsement of President Franklin D. Roosevelt and the New Deal were voiced in resolutions adopted by the Pennington county convention. The resolution recalls as a "nightfare the conditions of agriculture, prostrate and without hope, crushed by a criminal price level, when hunger, desolation, and abject poverty prevailed in a country capable of producing plenty for all; when the rules of finance and industry admitted their utter inability to cope with the situation; when thousands of young men and boys were forced to take to the road as tramps and hobos; when hopelessness and desperation reigned thruout the land. We recall the rapid change that came about in the spirit and conditions of the people of the country after March 4th, 1933."

The resolution lists some of the various steps that have been taken by the federal administration to meet the crisis of the depression and pledges the loyalty and support of Pennington county democrats to Roosevelt and the men that have supported him in their efforts on behalf of all the people as opposed to the forces of monopoly and special privileges.

H. O. Chommie was elected chairman of the convention and Miss Marie Wise, convention secretary.

The building was built in 1914 at a cost of about $85,000 exclusive of the cost of the site and is two floors with basement, is of re-inforced concrete construction thruout and brick veneered. It is believed to be the best constructed building in the city, and is 75 by 116 feet. The second floor contains the former Elks Hall and nine office suites except one of which are occupied. Three store quarters on the ground floor are occupied by the Peoples Cooperative Store, Leins Popular Price Store and Thief River Pharmacy. Corner quarters formerly occupied by the post office is the only vacant space. The basement contains the DuChamp Bowling Alleys, The Forum Publishing Company, and the Brattland Insurance agency. The building is stated to bring a revenue of around $600 per month.

Details of organizing the depositors for the purpose of purchasing the building were arranged by J. F. Landy of the state banking department with the assistance of Gilbert Brattland, deputy examiner in charge of liquidation.

pointed a committee on credentials. Following the report of the credentials committee and its adoption R. M. Aalbu was unanimously elected convention chairman and Mr Synnes convention secretary. The convention was addressed by W. E. Day and J. O. Melby. A short address was also given by Hubert Brown.

The selection of a district committee followed a thorough discussion of the proposition of a district campaign committee to coordinate the work of the campaign. It was decided that this committee in cooperation with the county committees are to synchronize the routing of speakers, and generally assist in organizing the district for a thorough and efficient campaign to elect the entire farmer-labor slate from U. S. senator to state representatives.

Resolutions were adopted commending the actions of the state farmer-labor convention and the candidates it nominated and the platform adopted as well as a commendation of the action of the 9th district convention in endorsing R. T. Buckler for reelection to congress.

When this has been demonstrated they will be sold if the tenant desires to purchase on easy payments spread out over a forty year period. The interest rate will not exceed 4 1-2 percent. The original cost will not be considered in fixing the price of these farms to the settlers the report states. The purchase price will be fixed on a basis of earning power determined by a ten year average of yield and prices.

At the present time it is hoped that this land can be secured in Pennington and adjoining counties and options must be closed before June 15th the report states. This project is not to be confused with colonization projects such as are being launched in some parts of the country, resettlement officials say. In this instance the farms will be located as near as possible to the present community centers such as Grygla, Goodridge, St. Hilaire and others and will be a definite aid in building and maintaining these communities and their present cooperative creameries and other activities. The farms will be of such size, 40, 80, or 160 acres as may be conveniently handled by one family and the size of them will depend upon soil conditions and other factors that may have a bearing on the type of farming; dairying, grain raising and so on, that the farm may be adapted to.

BENSON WINS IN FIGHT FOR SEED LOANS TO FARMS

President Roosevelt Abrogates Earlier Order and Loan Order Results

Elmer A. Benson, Minnesota's junior senator, led the fight which was successful last week, in obtaining seed loan relief for some 23,000 Minnesota farmers, who had faced a desperate situation, following an earlier veto of the seed loan bill by President Roosevelt.

As a result of negotiations begun and carried on by Senator Benson, President Roosevelt abrogated an earlier order and funds were assured for seed loans to the many thousands of farmers who faced loss of their land, machinery, livestock and homes in the event that they could receive no seed loans for this planting season

Senator Benson working with Senator Burton K. Wheeler of Montana, carried on the fight for three weeks, communicating with President Roosevelt by cable and by telegraph to the President's home at Warm Springs, Ga., to apprise him of the gravity of the situation and demonstrate the necessity of the release of seed loan funds to farmers barred from receiving such aid by technicalities in the regulations of the Farm Credit Administration and the Rural Resettlement administration.

Conferences between heads of these agencies and Budget Director Bell, finally resulted in the release of $27,000,000 additional.

Included in these additional funds is seven million dollars from the funds of the RRA and 10 millions in new money to be set aside from the budget for additional crop production loans.

Most of the money will be allocated for loans to farmers in Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Wisconsin, Nebraska and Montana.

Game Reports Must Be Sent by Hunters

The division of game and fish calls attention to the fact that only 21 percent of the hunters who obtained licenses last year have made their game reports to the department. Of the 213,487 hunting licenses sold during 1935 only 43,864 have been returned the department states.

Leo Peyton, game warden, states that in Pennington county where 603 licenses were sold to date of April 10th only 137 had been returned. In Red Lake county where 304 licenses were sold only 102 have been returned 23 percent and 34 percent respectively.

Mr Peyton calls attention of the hunters to the fact that the law provides that these licenses must be returned to the department whether or not the owner killed any game. He reminds the hunters that they may be refused a license next year if the return is not made. The license returns are used by the department in recording the state game census and serve a very definite purpose in the work of the department. Persons interested in game and conservation can assist in the work by reminding gun club members and sportsmen's clubs of the necessity of returning the licenses.

WPA PAY DAYS ARE FIXED ON NEW SCHEDULE

New System Will Speed Up the Payment of Wages to WPA Workers

To facilitate and speed up payment of wages to WPA workers, a system of grouping pay dates has been authorized by Victor Christgau, state administrator, according to announcement made by C. W. Anderson, acting director for the seventh district of the Works Progress Administration.

The new procedure will mean that WPA workers will receive their checks on the seventh day following the close of each semi-monthly payroll period, instead of the tenth day. The finance department, of which Waldemar Thorson is supervisor, has divided the district into four areas, each with a separate pay date.

"This change has made it necessary to issue checks for less than the usual figures," Mr. Thorson stated, "to cover the short period between the close of the old pay period and the beginning of the new period. After the first partial check has been received, the usual checks will be received regularly every two weeks on the same dates. The only exception will be when the pay dates fall on a Saturday Sunday or holiday when they will be distributed on the next regular working day."

The areas and the pay days for the project workers will be as follows:

Area 1—Beltrami and Clearwater counties, 5th and 20th of each month.

Area 2—Polk, Pennington, Red Lake, Clay, Norman and Mahnomen, 8th and 23rd.

Area 3—Becker, Roseau, Lake of the Woods, Kittson and Marshall, 12th and 27th.

Area 4—Otter Tail, Wilkin and NYA, 16th and 1st.

DATA ON SOIL IS TABULATED BY COMMITTEE

800 Work Sheets are Filed To Date; 300 Remain to Be Finished

Flax Need Not Have Been Raised Last Year to Qualify

Active work on the new Soil Conservation Program has been in progress somewhat over a week. There are approximately 800 work sheets completed at this time. The remaining ones about 300 in number, will have been executed by the end of this week. It will take the county allotment committee some time to check all recommendation for soil depleting base to the State Committee, County Agent R. M Douglass stated yesterday.

Mr. Douglass, realizes that most farmers are anxious to know what their soil depleting bases are so that they can make plans and seed accordingly. Perhaps the best that can be done at this time is for a farmer to total his acreage of soil depleting crops from harvested 1935 acres and if that acreage is normal for a period of years, then reduce that acreage by at least 15 percent. To be sure of the 15 percent reduction perhaps a farmer should shift more than what he thinks is the required amount. It must be remembered that neither a crop of grain or hay can be harvested from the shifted acres, Mr. Douglass says.

A good plan to follow if a farmer did not know exactly how much to shift would be to seed sweet clover with some of his oats or barley. If he finds later that

MAYOR PRICHARD ADDRESSES W P L MONDAY EVENING

League Votes to Remain Non-Political; Will Invite All Factions

The workmens protective league heard a discussion of business trends by Mayor W. W. Prichard at its meeting on Monday evening. Mr. Prichard dwelt at some length on the operation of the United States Steel corporation showing where the percentage received by labor fr[illegible] the dollar of income by th[illegible]pany has been materially in[illegible]ed during the past several ye[illegible] Displacement of labor by mach[illegible]y in some departments have been offset by the fact that the corporation has gone into the manufacture of side-lines, he stated.

Relief problems came in for a heated discussion, the lack of centralized responsibility, being deplored.

The meeting voted to reconsider the vote whereby the organization affiliated with the farmer-labor association, it being maintained by some of the speakers that the league should remain a non-political organization. The motion to affiliate was then again entertained and voted down

The business agent was instructed to contact the chairmen of the county organizations of the major political groups. Theo. Quale, republican chairman, Joe (Laboe) Maruska, democratic chairman and T. H. Levorson, farmer-labor chairman and to invite them to have a speaker appear at a general meeting of the league to expound the platform of their party and defend its record. Speakers will be allowed their own time for their speech following a regular business meeting and are to be given a hearing without questions unless they themselves throw the meeting open for open forum after their regular talk, it was decided.

The next meeting will be held on Monday, May 11th.

County Auditor Urges Property Owners to Give Full Facts

CLASSIFICATION OF PROP'TY IMPORTANT

Homestead Classification Means Large Reduction In Taxes Paid

Property owners of the City and the County are urged to make it a point this year to see the Assessor when he calls and have the Assessor fully understand the status of the property being assessed so that he can correctly classify the property under Chapter 359, Laws of 1933, this being the so called "homestead law", County Auditor Arthur Senstad, stated this week.

Real estate is assessed in the even numbered years only, and the assessment that is placed, and the classification that is made this year holds over in the odd numbered years. The Minnesota Tax Commission has ruled that there can be no reclassification of real estate under the homestead law in the odd numbered years except under certain specified conditions, therefore it is of the utmost importance to the tax-payer that his property be correctly classified this year by the assessor. It has also been ruled that a property can be classified as homestead on which there is a contract for deed whether such contract is recorded or not. If an error is made in the classification such error may be corrected; thru the Board of County Commissioners and the Minnesota Tax Commission but such a process involves considerable extra work for every one and may be avoided if a little care is used and the necessary information is given the assessor so that a correct classification is made. It is very irritating to the taxpayer to come in and find that his taxes are considerable higher than he figured due to the fact that the property is improperly classified.

DATA ON SOIL IS TABULATED BY COMMITTEE

800 Work Sheets are Filed To Date; 300 Remain to Be Finished

FLAX PAYMENTS ARE FIXED AT 20c BUSHEL

Flax Need Not Have Been Raised Last Year to Qualify

Active work on the new Soil Conservation Program has been in progress somewhat over a week. There are approximately 800 work sheets completed at this time. The remaining ones about 300 in number, will have been executed by the end of this week. It will take the county allotment committee some time to check all recommendation, for soil depleting base to the State Committee, County Agent R. M Douglass stated yesterday.

Mr. Douglass, realizes that most farmers are anxious to know what their soil depleting bases are so that they can make plans and seed accordingly. Perhaps the best that can be done at this time is for a farmer to total his acreage of soil depleting crops from harvested 1935 acres and if that acreage is normal for a period of years, then reduce that acreage by at least 15 percent. To be sure of the 15 percent reduction perhaps a farmer should shift more than what he thinks is the required amount. It must be remembered that neither a crop of grain or hay can be harvested from the shifted acres, Mr. Douglass says.

A good plan to follow if a farmer did not know exactly how much to shift would be to seed sweet clover with some of his oats or barley. If he finds later that

MAYOR PRICHARD ADDRESSES W P L MONDAY EVENING

League Votes to Remain Non-Political; Will Invite All Factions

The workmens protective league heard a discussion of business trends by Mayor W. W. Prichard at its meeting on Monday evening. Mr. Prichard dwelt at some length on the operation of the United States Steel corporation showing where the percentage received by labor from the dollar of income by the company has been materially increased during the past several years. The business agent was instructed to contact the chairmen of the county organizations of the major political groups. Theo. Quale, republican chairman, Joe (Laboe) Maruska, democratic chairman and T. H. Levorson, farmer-labor chairman and to invite them to have a speaker appear at a general meeting of the league to expound the platform of their party and defend its record. Speakers will be allowed their own time for their speech following a regular business meeting and are to be given a hearing without questions unless they themselves throw the meeting open for open forum after their regular talk, it was decided.

The next meeting will be held on Monday, May 11th.

INTENTIONAL DUPLICATE EXPOSURE

Work Will Start On Bronson Dam; Camp for 250 Men

Work on a $180,000 dam project to provide Hallock and Bronson with a pure water supply will begin the latter part of April, Victor Christgau, state WPA administrator, announced today.

Assignment of more than 250 "single unattached" men from the relief rolls for the camp set up at Bronson on Two Rivers river where the 30-foot dam will be constructed already has begun.

Action on the project, long sought by the residents of Hallock who have had to haul drinking water from a spring 30 miles distance, was made possible today by final clearance of the plans with the army engineers and the state executive council.

More than $145,000 in WPA funds and an appropriation of $36,000 by the State Executive council for the purchase of lands and equipment has been made available for the work which besides construction of the dam at Bronson includes replacement of a smaller dam at Hallock and clearing of brush in the area above Bronson where the waters will be backed up to create a lake about four miles long.

Situated on a salt bed, Hallock has been without a central supply of drinking water since its wells were condemned by the state board of health. Serious skin infections from bathing in the water and at least two cases of typhoid fever have resulted from the impurities of the water, residents of Hallock stated in their plea for assistance in correcting the situation.

Wells drilled to a depth of 1,200 feet failed to bring relief when it was found that salt was still produced at that depth. The critical situation, they said, is further aggravated each year when the river runs dry.

The dam WPA engineers explained, also is an important phase of the water conservation program of the Red River valley of the north.

Transfer of "single unattached" men to the camp at Bronson is necessitated by the fact that the project calls for many more men than can be supplied from local relief rolls in Kittson county.

Large crews are required on the project, he added, to speed as much of the work as possible to completion before June 30. In the event that the project is not completed by that date and cannot be continued under the federal work program, the state executive council has guaranteed an additional appropriation of $23,000 to carry on the work.

Files for Re-election

Cong. R. T. Buckler

Extensive Wheat Tests Made at the N.W. Exp't Station

More than three hundred samples of wheat from farms in Northwestern Minnesota were tested this winter by the Northwest Experiment Station under the direction of R. S. Dunham, agronomist, and E. R. Clark, pure seed specialist. Both blotter and soil tests were made. Based upon the results of these tests, the following conclusions were reached:

The percentage of germination determined by keeping seed moist and warm on blotters was often much higher than the percentage of sprouts that emerged when seed was planted in soil.

In general, the durums germinated more poorly and had less vigor than the common wheats.

The average percentage of emergence in a soil test was 69.3 per cent for Thatcher, Marquillo and Hope (rust resistant varieties); 63.8 per cent for other varities of common wheat; 53.5 per cent for durums; with an average of 63.5 per cent for all samples.

According to Professor Dunham the unusually low germination and lack of vigor this year are due to shrivelled seed, cracked seed and sprout damage and disease.

Timely suggestions for Northwestern Minnesota farmers include the following:

Grade all seed so that only the plumpest kernels remain.

Test this seed by planting 200 kernels 2 1-2 inches deep in soil and keeping them warm and moist until the sprouts emerge. If the result is not satisfactory, purchase better seed

Before sowing, treat with New Improved Ceresan at the rate of 1-2 oz. per bushel of seed. At present this treatment is recommended since it controls covered smut and other seed-borne disease and may increase the emergence of seedlings considerably. Treating with formaldehyde may reduce the germination but it is an excellent disinfectant for covered smut.

Prepare the best seedbed possible. Attention to seedbed preparation will be more important than usual where light weight seed is used. For light weight seed sown in a good seed bed, the increased number of seeds in a bushel will tend to offset the reduced germination.

And finally, avoid sowing too deep.

FORMER COWPUNCHER LASSOES COWS IN LAKE

Mound—Ernie Johnson, former cowpuncher in the Montanas, lassoed three cows from the open lake at King's Point near Mound recently, and proved that he had lost none of the knack of roping. The cows belonging to Mr. Logsden, a farmer, strolled across the ice and ventured too close to a spot where ice had been recently harvested, tumbling in. Attracted by the shouts of the farmer, L. Dorwillar, Fred King, and Johnson arrived at the scene When they saw the cows swimming around in the water, Johnson asked the farmer for a rope, and when he got it he lassoed the cows one by one, pulling them out of the cold water with the help of the other men. The cows were so chilled by that time they could hardly walk, and had to be shoved up into the barn.

Special Short Course At AC Early Summeer

Arrangements are being made for a number of special short courses and meetings to be held on the Northwest School campus during the early summer months. Activities will open with the 4-H club week which is scheduled for June 1 to 6. According to District Club Leader H. A. Pflughoeft, about one thousand 4-H club members, together with their leaders, from thirteen northwestern Minnesota counties will be in attendance. To insure adequate dormitory, dining hall and class room facilities the short course will be divided into two sections; one group meeting the first three days of the week, followed by the second group the last three days of the week. Instruction will be presented by members of the Northwest School and Station staff assisted by State Club leaders and county agents. Other meetings include the Women's Camp, June 8-11; the Alumni Summer Reunion, June 27; and Crops and Soils Day, July 13.

Registrar J. W. Mlinar and Miss Retta Bede will supervise the Women's Camp program, while R. S. Dunham, agronomist, T. M. McCall, horticulturist, and E. R. Clark, pure seed specialist, will have charge of the Crops and Soils Day meeting. Community clubs and other groups are being invited to visit the station during the summer months.

W. C. T. U. NOTES

35,000 DEAD AND THE DRIVER WHO DRINKS!

The National Safety Council in a preliminary review of 1934's record states that motor traffic accident deaths for 1934 reached a total of 35,000,—at least 5,500 more than in 1933

A similar national survey connected with the Travelers Insurance Company of Hartford, Conn., reports a gain, as compared with 1933 of nearly 24 percent in the number of drunken drivers and of more than 55 percent in drunken pedestrians involved in automobile accidents in 1934.

A survey presented, by Dr. Theron Wendell Kilmer of New York City, at the 1934 Convention of the International Convention of Police Chiefs, Washington, D. C., reports many individual city police records showing startling increases in accidents attributable to intoxication among them: New York City, 25 percent; Philadelphia, 300 percent; District of Columbia, 42 percent; Cincinnati, 380 percent; Los Angeles, 479 percent; New Orleans, 122 percent.

Reckoned on the basis of the National Safety Council's statistical findings, which in an official statement last year asserted that each automobile accident fatality involved a property loss of $50,000 the record of automobile deaths in 1934 involved a total cost to the participants of $1,772,000,000—an increase of something like $275,000,000 over that of 1933!

This is simply one item in the record of re-legalized liquor's first year since repeal. Dry laws, backed by public sentiment educated and aroused by this record, and abolishing liquor advertising, would go far toward remedying this startling situation.

The coach, a gift from the General Motors-sponsored educational foundation, becomes a permanent addition to the motion picture actress' fairy castle, which is being taken on tour of the country to aid the nation's crippled children.

NEW TAX BILL BEING DEBATED BY HOUSE—

Washington, D. C.—The new administration tax bill under consideration in the House since the middle of last week is scheduled to be passed late this week. It then will go to the Senate where it will be rewritten, changes made and no doubt later passed. Conference committees will iron out the differences and both branches of Congress will pass the new bill again later.

There is much in the new tax bill that is misunderstood. There is much in it that possibly does not need to be understood, in detail, so long as one understands what is to be accomplished. This is particularly true of the provision for taxing corporate profits. the Purpose here, for the most part is to plug the loop-holes through which certain wealthy people have been avoiding payment of income taxes by leaving their earnings in the corporations that they control.

FIGHT ON OVER NEW RELIEF FUNDS DIVISION

The fight over whether PWA is to have any of the $1,500,000,000 requested for the WPA centers very much on the question of relative employment furnished by the two works organizations. It is conceded that both types of work furnish employment to the unemployed but not to the same unemployed.

WPA which furnishes most of its jobs to those on relief is favored by those who believe that the primary purpose is to meet the social costs and threats of relief rollers, while PWA, by furnishing much indirect employment to the unemployed who are not on relief is favored by those who believe the main purpose is to provide work for the unemployed, whether or not they are on relief.

WHAT'S IN A NAME

We have on a few occasions been disappointed in the name we had thrust upon us by a relentless fate. Having been called Alibow, Calbee, Walbo, and on one occasion even being approached by a party who said he wished to see a Mr. Elbow or Mr. Knee or somp'in, he couldn't remember which; we had come to look with envy upon people who could be just plain Olson, Nelson, Peterson or Johnson. At least it would eliminate the necessity of repeating and spelling it out on so many occasions.

But it has its compensations after all.

We gather from a front page editorial in the Marshall County Star, published at Warren that there is a considerable political turmoil in our neighboring county to the north and the explanation lies in the fact that Verner Nelson, formerly cashier in the First National Bank of this city and now a resident of Warren, is a republican and Verner Nelson, formerly of Roseau and now editor of the Marshall County Star at Warren is a farmer-laborite. Both were delegates to their respective state conventions.

Verner Nelson, editor of the Star finds it very embarrasing to be accused of having been a delegate to the republican convention, and undoubtedly, Verner Nelson, erstwhile cashier here finds it equally embarrasing to have anyone suggest that he would be even remotely connected with the farmer-labor group, to say nothing about being their delegate at a state convention. To make the soup even thicker, it appears that neither one has a middle initial that they can use.

Being thus caught one on each of the horns of a dilemma, Verner Nelson, (farmer-laborite) takes drastic steps to clear up the matter. In order to find a solution he offers a year's subscription to the Star for the best suggestion for middle initials that one or both of the Verners can adopt to eliminate the difficulties.

Always ready to assist, even tho at this time we can not profit thereby, for we get the Star on our exchange list, we nevertheless hasten to suggest that in place of a middle initial they each adopt the insignia of their respective parties; the elephant and the non-partisan goat to grace the space between the names Verner and Nelson.

USQUE AD NAUSEAM

"We support the right of labor to organize and to bargain collectively for betterments in wages, hours of labor and working conditions.

"We continue to favor a short working week and high wages, and we oppose all sweat shop conditions and all oppressive employer regulations". Exceprt from the Minnesota Republican platform adopted by St. Paul convention April 18, 1936.

A very unnecessary statement, we are sure. Everyone must know how the republicans have always supported the rights of labor to organize and bargain collectively. Didn't their daily press and all the little republican weaklies out thru the state rally militantly to the support of the striking truckdrivers of Minneapolis in 1934 when they demanded the right to bargain collectively? Yea, to be sure they did. And didn't they support the Strutwear strikers when they made the same demands? Yes, yes to be sure they did . . . n't.

And of course they will continue to favor shorter hours, etc. . . . in the future, as in the past. And what a glorious past. Especially the past hung up by the elected representatives who are leading their procession. Their nonpareil leader, the one and only, Roy E. Dunn, now their national committeeman by unanimous choice of the convention led the fight in the 1933 session of the legislature against the minimum hours law for women. He introduced amendments to kill the bill so rotten that none but himself would vote for them. He voted against every labor bill in every session since. He was a leader in the fight to put over every iniquious, labor hating proposal that has been introduced. The chairman of the convention, Senator Sletvold of Detroit Lakes voted a one hundred percent reactionary record in both the regular and the special sessions in which he has served. Eleven times wrong out of eleven times to bat in the regular session and six times wrong out of six times up in the special session. The crown prince, (Get by) Rufus Hitchcock, now publicity agent par excellence, for the republican organization led the fight on the unemployment insurance bill in 1933 and fought EVERY labor bill in that session. He hung up such a reactionary record that he didn't dare to file for reelection.

The Minnesota republican organization not only represent, they are a part and parcel, hide, hoofs, and horns, the labor hating, striker killing, fink hiring, Citizens Alliance, Liberty League, chain bank buccaneers that has fought not only every labor law, but every other constructive measure that was introduced to benefit farmers, workers and legitimate businessmen in Minnesota. Their record of exploitation and labor baiting stamps their platform as a blasphemy and a perjury and Minnesota voters are not going to fall for it.

AND REPUBLICANS ARE PROUD OF IT

Leif H. Gilstad, political writer for the Minneapolis Journal has been to Kansas and made a survey for the purpose of giving Governor Landon favorable publicity. It seems that the Minneapolis Journal believes that Landon should be the next president of the United States and it would like to make as many Minnesotans as possible agree with them. However, if we are at all conversant with Minnesotans, we are of the opinion that the Journal would do Landon a greater service if they call Gilstad off the job. He is evidently so boneheaded reactionary that he doesn't even know what is good publicity in Minnesota. For instance, in the Journal for Monday, April 20, Gilstad tells us: "Take schools for example. Kansas has a permanent school fund which provides some aid to local schools but it does not come up to Minnesota's big fund, and is the only state aid now provided for Kansas schools. There was a bill before the last session designed to equalize the school burden, by providing financial help on a basis of grants to acquire 'minimum opportunity' to all children . . . . While it lost, it is sure to bob up again . . . and . . . it is likely to mean a sales tax . . . . More than 400 schools have been closed in Kansas in the last five years, for various reasons".

Kansas has saved on highways too, according to Gilstad. They have "no bond issues; no extra financing, low automobile licenses—they were cut under Landon—hard surfaced roads instead of paving" The gas tax is enough to meet federal aid but Kansas has no money to take up some of the special federal grants for road work, Gilstad assures us. However, these things do not mean that Kansas is short of money, if we are to believe Mr. Gilstad. Far from it! "Oil now is found in almost all parts of the state with the result that Kansas claims to be the third producing state in the country. The practice is for operators interested in oil to lease parts of farms for a dollar an acre, and pay a royalty if oil is produced."

Leif is a bear for comparisons too. He points out that in Minnesota we 'soak the rich' something scandalously with an income tax of from one to five percent on individuals and corporations alike, while in good old Kansas the individuals are getting by with a maximum of four percent and the corporations—ah yes, these blessed and lowly corporations are taxed "with a flat 2 per cent rate."

All in all, we are left with the impression from Mr. Gilstad's articles that Kansas is indeed a republican paradise under Landon. Freedom, liberty and rugged individualism is running rampant. Children are free to go to school—if they can find a school that is open. Motorists are free (almost, for licenses are very low) to bump along over dirt roads and thru the mudholes. And corporations, oil operators and business—O! Kansas thou Jewel—out over thine wide open spaces entrepreneurs may indeed be free to exploit natural resources and your people without undue interference from government.

PATRIOTS IN THE MAKING
(Minneapolis Tribune)

Because they obeyed their father and refused to salute the school flag, three Massachusetts children have been hailed into court and sentenced to confinement in a reform school. The school records of these children, who are 10, 12 and 15 years of age, show them to be "generally co-operative" in conduct, and "comparatively superior in study." Their father is a member of a religious sect which is forbidden to salute the flag; he is not "against the government".

Nevertheless the Massachusetts flag law makes it possible for these children to be whisked out of school, solemnly arraigned before a judge, and dispatched to a reformatory to contemplate the error of their ways. Presumably they will be released when they consent to salute the flag; but meanwhile, as wards of the state, they must pay a penalty for holding to their conscientious scruples.

Thus Massachusetts, which has traditionally held liberty so dear, administers a stern rebuke to three youngsters who cannot bring themselves to make a hypocritical obeisance to the flag. It is enforcing a law which cannot possibly compel patriotism, which is an attitude of mind, but only insists upon a yielding to its outward forms. If the Massachusetts school child is incapable of a sincere tribbute to the flag, the law will accept an insincere salute; but the alternative to immature and misguided refusal, apparently is the reformatory.

That men and women of unimpeachable patriotism are responsible for this law we have no doubt, nor do we question the wisdom of any effort to inculcate, in the school child, a deep respect for the American flag and everything it stands for. Still it is fairly plain that this respect will find its deepest roots in the soil of tolerance and sympathetic understanding, and not in a system which treats, as a criminal, the child who will not make a formal gesture of respect.

If Massachusetts is interested in creating patriots, well and good; the effort is entirely worthy of that commonwealth's traditions. But what sort of patriotism is being bred today in three young minds reflecting, behind reformatory bars, on the flinty concepts of liberty and justice which their flag-saluting elders manifest?

OBJECT LESSON
(St. Paul Daily News)

When a Republican senator from a conservative state like Vermont questions a financial practice, that is news.

So it is worth recording that Sen. Ernest W. Gibson observed before the lobby investigating committee that Henry L. Doherty, head of Cities Service, took "a good profit and left his employees holding the bag."

The remark was inspired by the revelation that Mr. Doherty sold 200,000 shares of Cities Service stock in 1929 at a profit of $17,748,032. It developed further than about $8,000,000 of the profit was invested in state and municipal bonds.

At the time, if memory serves thousands of Americans (employes and private citizens) Cities Service was one of the good things which would never end. They invested their hard-earned dollars in it in the hope which then seemed sure of relization that they would get rich.

WHICH WOULD YOU PREFER
(Blooming Prairie Times)

Speaking before a group of business men, S. Wells Utley recently told of an automobile driver who was taken before the judge for speeding.

"Well, hurry up and do whatever you're going to do," the driver snapped, "for I am in a hurry. You can't do anything to me anyhow."

When the judge recovered from that amazing speech he exclaimed, "Who do you think you are that you can talk to me in this manner?"—only to be met with the calm reply: "I am the chauffeur of the warden of Sing Sing prison and I'm a lifer."

That man said Utley, had achieved economic security. All his life the government will take care of him, feed him, clothe him, doctor him and relieve him of taxes. Which would you prefer: his security or your freedom?

Editorial Obligations
By Victor N. Vetromile

(Reprinted from the National Printer Journalist)

Not alone in fundamental economic conception is the newspaper as an institution unique among other businesses, but also in the character of some of the services which it is called upon to perform and which, by the traditions and precepts of journalism, are a part of its very life.

Because of the character of some of these services, and the fact that the immediate primary benefits therefrom accrue to agencies other than the newspaper itself, I will consider them under the group of "altruistic functions."

Before going further with this discussion of the special duties and obligations inherent with newspapers, perhaps I should say that unfortunately, there has been a gradual recession in some sections from these hallowed principles of practice which inspired the masterful exponents of personal editorial power in the earlier days of American journalism. The result has been a steadily widening chasm between the concepts of idealism which were characteristic of the old school of editors and publishers, and the almost purely commercial policies characteristic of the present day highly-industrialized and over-standardized news press.

But the principles that make a newspaper a respected local institution or a nationally-known force for good still have their root in the old-fashioned altruistic policy of service to the people at all times and service without price; in fact, usually, it is in the services which it renders without price that a newspaper exemplifies its greatest power.

One of the greatest of American publishers, now retired and basking in the evening sun of life, once said in a salutatory of only a few lines in the first issue of his newspaper about 40 years ago: "The Telegram will never truckle to the wealthy and great of the earth. The truly great are the readers of the Telegram." What a percipient brain wrote those words! A brain ever keen in its psychological estimate of newspaper readers and newspaper functions alike! The newspaper devoted to public service is a truly great constructive force for good in every city, but unfortunately, many newspapers dedicated to this policy seem to have abandoned their sacred trust of public confidence and opportunity for civic betterment early in their careers.

Exposing chicanery and fraud in business, maladministration in municipal government, unsafe conditions in factories, mills and stores, police brutality, nuisance detrimental to the health of the population, cruel and inhuman treatment of inmates in asylums, almshouses and other public institutions dangerous conditions of streets and highways; co-operating in building-fund drives for new Y. M. C. A.'s and new hospitals and other public and quasi-public projects, as well as inaugurating and conducting any other of the many common forms of expose and agitation in the interest of the public welfare—these are typical of what is meant by the altruistic functions of newspapers.

Mere publication of the facts about which each of these constructive agitations evolves would probably require only one story or article of average length and display, but proper fulfillment of the true and higher functions of the newspaper requires that the disclosures be followed up agresively both in the news and in the editorial columns. Furthermore, if newspapers gave to the public only such news of important matters as is given to the reporter or is spontaneously manifested, the insidious agencies ever active in the suppression of graft, speculation, fraud, political malfeasance, and crimes of all kinds would leave the public largely in the dark as to what was taking place about them.

The alert editor knows it is his duty to use the power of his newspaper to extricate evils, no matter in what guise or in what sphere of the community's life they come up.

Agitational journalism is constructive journalism—it brings increased life and economic and moral vigor to community interests by reason of its educational power and its cumulative power of reformation in governmental and sociological affairs. It is a new paper's greatest weapon and opportunity for encroachment in a field where a handful of vested interests, owning or dominating a stagnant newspaper, are exploiting a city for selfish ends and stifling progress

A newspaper that conducts no fights and remains quiescent on public issues when it should assert itself, is impotent, though it publish every local news item in its field. Its heritage of public inquisition and challenge forbids the real newspaper to attempt to be neutral. Instead it must pursue the altruistic course intended for it—namely, using its powers for the greatest good unto the greatest number at all times. In this course it finds its own ultimate profit.

I would not regard it as the function of any newspaper to specialize in fomenting controversies or agitation, but I do maintain that, when there is any dominant agitation or controversial issue of any kind whatsoever engaging public attention in the editor's field, an assumed attitude of neutrality would, in many instances, amount to treason against public welfare and the traditions of the editorial responsibility of a really virile and independent newspaper.

CAPITOL NEWS REVIEW
By A. I. Harris

An action of far-reaching significance in the history of American liberalism was taken when the state Farmer-Labor convention went on record favoring calling of a conference to take up the matter of forming a national Farmer-Labor party . . .

It is known that millions of liberals throughout the nation look to the movement in Minnesota for leadership in the struggle against economic despotism. A national third party in 1936, which could elect a progressive bloc both in the House and Senate with political allegiance to neither of the old parties, would unquestionably have a wholesome effect on the course of legislation during the next four years . . .

Liberals are not in complete agreement on the wisdom of placing a national presidential ticket in the field for 1936, some contending that it may defeat Roosevelt and place in power a reactionary, fascist regime. Roosevelt's course in the next few months may be a determining factor. That a third party, advocating fundamental changes in our descrepit economic system, and boldly declaring against war and fascism, will enter the American political arena, seems certain.

The state railroad and warehouse commission has issued an order providing for telephone rate reductions for residents of the St. Paul area amounting to from 18 to 30 per cent, terminating proceedings dating back to February 1932 . . .

Attorney General Peterson, backing up the decision, said that he is prepared to go to court and require the Tri-State Telephone and Telegraph company to post a bond covering any excessive fees collected before the rate cuts ordered by the commission have been approved by the courts. .

Pointing out the necessity for rate reduction in Minneapolis the attorney general wrote the commission as follows: "A preliminary survey made in 1929 indicates that existing telephone rates in Minneapolis are excessive. Your decision in the St. Paul rate case will result in a saving to the people of St. Paul of $500,000 per year. A corresponding reduction of rates in Minneapolis would effect a saving of at least $750,000 to the telephone patrons of that city."

In another of its efforts to discredit the administration, one of the Twin City dailies gave credit for the final approval of the Minnesota old age assistance law to two conservative state representatives who went to Washington to confer with members of the Social Security Board. . . .

As a matter of fact, the Social Security Board had already wired Kenneth Haycraft director of old age assistance, that no additional information was required . . .

The Social Security Board had previously indicated that it would refuse to approve the Minnesota old age assistance plan unless assurance were given that additional funds for state administration would be made available. The state board of control consulted with the legislative interim committee on social security and asked them to make some assurance to the Social Security Board in Washington that additional funds would be available in January, 1937. This assurance was given and the way was paved for federal approval. The trip of the conservative legislators to Washington would seem to have been entirely unnecessary.

Minute Sermon
By Dr. Crawford Grays

Jesus Christ began His career in an age that was extremely mercenary. The natural rights of man were not a part of the polity of either church or political authority. All in authority increased their authority, corrupted the courts and impoverished the people.

The brief campaign that Jesus Christ made against the then conditions was tremendous. He sprung upon mankind a revolution such as the world had not known before, has not known since.

Two things above all others of the many things He said and did stand out most prominent, viz: His condemnation of the rich and His concern for the poor. He said, "I am come not to send peace but a sword;" which meant the reforms He promulgated, the existing evils He sought to destroy, would produce civil and military conflicts.

The rulers did not want any repetition of overthrowing like Jesus did in the Temple for that would deprive them of their power and spoil, so to the Cross went the Nazarene aided by a Judas

VIEWS AND REVIEWS

Consumers Union

Last summer, when Consumers Research, Inc., betrayed labor-hating proclivities equaled only by out-and-out hidebound capitalistic concerns, in the famous strike by its employees for better wages and working conditions, the National Labor Relations Board made a set of recommendations. F. L. Schlink, Mrs. Schlink, and J. B. Matthews, heads of Consumers Research, saw fit to ignore these recommendations ignore the strike the strikers, and everything connected with the situation.

As a consequence the eyes of liberal and progressive elements were opened. Consumers Research, a beautiful liberal dream, was unfounded in capitalist reality—it had failed in its first major crisis—in dealing with its employees. Its officers might preach a better world, but they would not help improve this one It was a cynical situation.

Arthur Kallet and others connected with C. R. soon abandoned the labor-hating organ and set in motion one designed really to help the labor movement. Consumers Union is the result. Already it is covering the field formerly occupied by Consumers Research, and in addition its liberal attitude towards the working class makes it a valuable adjunct to the movement.

Consumers Union will give reliable information about manufactured goods—which are the "best buys" in a world made topsy-turvy by too heavy an accent on selling things the people don't need.

—O—

May Day, 1936

May Day this year will be a big day for labor organizations, as it has been in the past—perhaps bigger. This year United Front demonstrations will be held in all the principal cities. Fifth Avenue, New York City, was thrown open to the demonstrators, for the first time in history. It either means that the working class is going respectable, or that the ruling class sees the handwriting on the wall; and all evidence seems to support the latter contention.

May Day, 1936, will prove that the working class is becoming as class-conscious as the ruling class and that organization of the one must be offset by organization of the other. Fascism, the expression of a desperate capitalism, can only be combatted by a United Front of all progressives and radicals; and this idea will be deeply underlined at all May Day celebrations.

—O—

Poor Arthur Brisbane!

Arthur Brisbane, world's highest paid columnist, commented recently upon the various Army Day parades held April 7, celebrating America's entry into the World war. Of these celebrations he said: "That seems like celebrating the time you fell downstairs and broke your leg We had no business in that war that caused us to squander fifty thousand million dollars with inept extravagance plus ten thousand millions to dishonorable borrowers in Europe.

"Celebrating foolishness of that kind seems childish. . . High finance, disguised as patriotism, had its way, so we had our war, and now we have our depression".

Were these admirable sentiments widely published in the Hearst press, of which Brisbane is part and parcel? Coming from a man who had an ardent hero-worship of strong men like Mussolini, and admiration for airplanes as instruments of warfare, this blast against war came as a shock. The day this column was released. Hearst burnt up the wires cancelling it. From this incident it appears that Arthur Brisbane gets paid for keeping his mouth shut, not for telling the truth.

FARMERS' INDEPENDENCE COUNCIL

One doesn't have to remember back very far to recall the days when the farmer was the political step-child of the country. Only about once every four years—during campaign times—did the large-waisted lads who managed affairs take thought of him. Then for a few weeks, he was no end of an important fellow. He was patted on the back and given cigars.

But after the election was safely over with, he was again forgotten—though it did happen, now and then that his Congressman remembered to send him a copy of the 'Congressional Record' Containing some speech or other which that gentleman had presumably made.

* * * *

That, however, was before the farmer learned to organize. Now the situation is quite different There is hardly a group in the land which has been shown the solicitous concern of politicians that has been accorded the farmer the last few years.

He has suddenly found himself to be a considerable pumpkin, before whom those courting the voter's favor are bowing and scraping in a most obsequious manner.

Nor is this all. Agriculture's cause is finding champions in the most unexpected quarters. There are even farm organizations of whose existence the farmers themselves are wholly unaware.

Consider, for example, the "Farmers' Independence Council", with headquarters here in Washington and branch offices elsewhere about the country. Its stated purpose is 'to protect the interests of American farmers'.

And not a farmer belongs! . . . Which must, of necessity, raise the presumption that it was formed by a group of real friendly folks who have the farmers' weal and woe at heart.

* * * *

And thus, indeed, it is. For let it be said here and now that the 'Council' has striven mightily on the farmer's behalf.

It has especially gone to lengths in opposing those things which might tend to lessen his self-reliance and independence. In line with this, it has fought tooth and nail against such socialistic schemes as the AAA, or the Soil Erosion Act, because, as everybody knows these are intended to regiment the farmer and utterly destroy his independence.

"Nothing", the Council sternly proclaims, "must be done to lessen the farmer's rugged individualism!" If he starves in the process of upholding this sacred principle, it is unfortunate, of course, but it will be in a good cause At all hazards, his independence must be preserved, even if he hasn't so much as a patch to put on the seat of his worn-out breeches.

* * * *

The gentlemen of the 'Council' are not themselves farmers, of course. Indeed, one suspects that their knowledge of farm matters is not much broader than that possessed by a certain city lad. . .

The boy, visiting the country for the first time, spied a number of pigs lying in the shade of the windmill tower.

"You've sure got a modern farm, uncle!" he exclaimed, "Electric fan for your pigs, 'n everything!"

* * * *

The exact make-up of the 'Farmers Independence Council' was something of a mystery, until the Senate Lobby Committee which has nothing better to do than to mess into other people's business, got at the facts. . .

One Dr. E. V. Wilcox seems to be the chief factotum here. He has desk space in the office of the DuPont-owned American Liberty League. The 'doctor' claims freelance writing on farm topics as his chief avocation

The Chicago office is in charge of Stanley F. Morse, formerly on the staff of the Liberty League as "consulting agricultural engineer".

* * * *

Here's something we almost forgot to mention: . .

The Farmers Independence Council is financed largely by DuPont and by W. W. Woods of the Meat Packers Institute of Chicago.

The Effects Of Inflation
By Maynard C. Krueger

It is becoming increasingly clear to the farmers and workers that the "New Deal" is not solving their problems. As disillusionment grows the probability of currency and credit inflation increases.

Inflation now will not repair the damage that has been done. Inflation will not restore farms or homes to those who have already had mortgages foreclosed. The farmer's fundamental problem is the spread between the prices of the things he buys and the prices of the things he sells. Inflation does not solve this problem, because it increases both.

For the unemployed it means less relief because prices will go up faster than relief allowances.

Workers' Wages Will Be Lowered

For the worker who still has a job inflation means a drastic wage cut Experience has shown that when prices rise, the cost of living goes up, sooner and faster, and farther than wages. The cost of living goes up in the elevator while wages climb the stairs. During a period of inflation, there is always an increase in the percentage of the national income that goes to workers.

The government's monetary policy has reduced the value of the dollar abroad, but domestic prices have risen very little. The Smoot-Hawley tariff bill of the Republican administration was already the highest in American history, but the effect of the Roosevelt dollar devaluation program has been to make the rates in the Smoot-Hawley bill actually about 60 per cent higher than when the act was passed. This is simply one part of the dangerous trend toward economic nationalism which is leading us ever nearer and nearer to another capitalist war.

Inflation results in the transfer of considerable wealth from creditors to debtors, but these transfers are, for the most part, simply from one part of the capitalist class to another.

Will Not End Exploitation

Inflation is a measure undertaken by a confused capitalist government when it does not know what else to do. Like the other major acts of the Roosevelt administration, inflation leaves unaltered the capitalist system of exploitation.

G. M. C. TRUCKS
We have trucks from ½-ton to any required size

No load is too big . . . no trucking operation is too tough . . . no hill is too steep . . . but that some unit in GMC's full line of trucks and trailers can speed the way to a profitable, dependable and timely delivery.

To make available the power and capacity exactly suited to every transportation need, GMC offers twenty-one truck and six trailer models. A milk wagon and a series of cab-over-engine trucks and full-automatic trailer units are available for more specialized trucking operations.

Over 100 chassis, several hundred tire options, ten power plants and a variety of clutches, transmissions, steering gears, and other chassis units, support the statement that GMC offers "the world's most complete line of matched equipment". This extreme flexibility to meet varied transportation requirements is a feature of GMC design and construction which assures equipment exactly suited to your needs. Extreme rigidity in adhering to quality standards, results in a uniform quality which has found expression in the phrase—GMC "The Truck of Value".

A complete line of GMC "truck-built" valve-in-head engines develop the highest sustained torque per cubic inch displacement of any engines of comparable size. All GMC brakes are designed to provide rapid stopping ability and minimum maintenance. All truck models, with the single exception of the light delivery unit feature a full-floating axle. Drop-forged, spoksteel wheels are standard on all truck and trailer models above the half-ton unit. Trailer axles are of large section tubular design, the lightest yet strongest known. Trailer frames are of deep section one-piece design. GMC also sets the pace with sound yet distinctive stream-styled truck appearance. All GMC cabs are of drop-skirt design. The set-back front axles in medium and heavier duty models are a distinguishing characteristic of GMC front-end construction. Standard and deluxe, chassis, cab and color options, designed to satisfy the most discriminating taste permit the selection of units possessing the ultimate in beauty and refinement.

These are but an indication of the fact that the General Motors Truck Company is pledged to the building of equipment designed to solve your transportation problem most economically.

"I want you to pose for my great picture to be hung in the town hall," said the celebrated artist to a tramp he met on the road. "Will you do it? I'll pay you well."

"What's it about?" asked the mendicant suspiciously.

"It's to be called 'The Return of the Prodigal Son.' You know the story of the father who killed the fatted calf because he was so pleased his boy had come back."

The tramp shook his head.

"I can't do it," he replied.

"But why? It's not hard," urged the artist.

"What's her plaint?"

"She wants to know what kind of soap you use for washing lettuce."

After an immense amount of trouble the vicar of a country parish succeeded in reconciling two old women who had been quarrelling for years. He even induced them to meet under the vicarage roof.

In his drawing room they shook hands. After an embarrassed silence one said:

"Well, Mrs. Tyler, I wish you all you wishes me."

"An' who's saying nasty things now?" snapped Mrs. Tyler.

Brown and his wife were at a local concert, and Mrs. Brown loudly applauded one of the singers.

"Why are you clapping for an encore? Her singing was terrible," said Brown, irritably.

"I know it," replied the wife, "but I want to have another good look at her frock."—Pearson's Weekly.

Heard Obscurely

"What does Harold call his motor boat?" asked Maude.

"I can't say exactly," replied Maymie. "But I'm sure what he called it when he was trying to start the engine wasn't the name painted on the bow."

"Your magazine articles are rather sensational in their tone."

"Yes," replied the popular writer on economics. "I have to make 'em that way to keep people from skipping them and reading nothing but the fiction."

"I want you to pose for my great picture to be hung in the town hall," said the celebrated artist to a tramp he met on the road. "Will you do it? I'll pay you well."

"What's it about?" asked the mendicant suspiciously.

"It's to be called 'The Return of the Prodigal Son.' You know the story of the father who killed the fatted calf because he was so pleased his boy had come back."

The tramp shook his head.

"I can't do it," he replied.

"But why? It's not hard," urged the artist.

"No; veal don't agree with me," replied the tramp.—Answers Magazine.

After an immense amount of trouble the vicar of a country parish succeeded in reconciling two old women who had been quarreling for years. He even induced them to meet under the vicarage roof.

In his drawing room they shook hands. After an embarrassed silence one said:

"Well, Mrs. Tyler, I wish you all you wishes me."

"An' who's saying nasty thing now?" snapped Mrs. Tyler.

CAUGHT IN THE WILD

By ROBERT AMES BENNET

He climbed upon the tail, ran forward to the cabin, and swung inboard. The frozen body of Constable Dillon lay on the floor where he had placed it. He buckled the cartridge belt with its holstered pistol about his own waist, took the keys and handcuffs from Dillon's pocket, and climbed out to scramble forward into the cockpit.

The side of the cockpit had been pierced by several bullets. But when Huxby fired at the drifting plane, in his attempt to kill the supposedly hidden fugitive, he had aimed with great care to avoid damage to the instruments and controls and the motor.

After removing the breaker points from the magneto, Garth ran back to the tail of the plane. Here came the greatest of his risks. The bridge poles had risen to the surface again, but the outermost cross logs remained embedded in the mud under the water.

He let himself down sideways. As his moccasins touched the slender trunks, he let go of the rudder and leaped. Though the ends of the poles shot downwards, his swift dash carried him up their sharp slant to the next pair of trunks.

The rest of the improvised bridge was fairly firm. A single misstep anywhere along it would have landed him in deep bog; but he had done far too much canoeing and rough-ground running to lack balance or sure-footedness.

Safe back on solid ground, he at once stepped into his snowshoes and headed straight away from the shore into a dense growth of spruce. There he circled to the right towards the glacier gulch, keeping well back from the lake.

Midway to the stream channel he stopped where, through separate vistas, he could see both planes. The gray dawn had brightened enough to make them visible at a distance. He sat down on a log to wait. In the Eskimo suit, the cold was negligible.

A look at the constable's pistol showed it to be fully loaded. He took off the belt and buckled it on again up under the loose fullness of his parka. Holstered between the caribou skin and his rabbit-fur undersuit, the oil in the pistol mechanism would become warm. Cold oil is apt to jam a gun.

After making sure of the pistol, he had nothing to do except give his face an occasional rub to prevent frostbite. He sat restfully relaxed, as patient as an Eskimo hunter beside a seal hole. Very slowly the gray dawn brightened. It at last began to mellow into gold.

From across the lake came the crack of rifles—three shots in quick succession. Garth told himself that Huxby or his men were hunting moose. He surmised why. The engineer planned to cover the shattered ends of the three-seater plane's floats with rawhide.

The sun glared over the jagged barrier mountains into the frost-gripped valley. Quite a while later, Garth saw one of his four enemies come out of the trees near the lake shore, on the far side of the frozen glacier stream. The man carried a big folded hide on his left shoulder. He held his rifle ready for a quick shot, and as he advanced, he peered around at the brush and trees.

A shout turned the man's steps up towards the ford. Other shouts came from the slope above. Garth smiled. It was as he had foreseen. In coming to repair the floats of the three-seater plane, Huxby and his men had formed a line from the lake shore to timberline and searched the spruce woods.

But the hunters had found no trace of their quarry all the way to the bank of the frozen glacier stream. There, however, the snowshoe tracks coming down from the tundra made plain sign even for chechahcos. Huxby came running along the trail, followed by the man with the moosehide.

Near the plane the engineer stopped for the miner to overtake him. They approached the stranded aircraft warily, with rifles raised, ready to shoot. When nothing happened, Huxby signaled for his companion to drop the hide and climb aboard. As the man obeyed, another of the miners came running down the trail.

Huxby was looking at the tracks that led on along the lake shore. The man on the plane peered into the three cockpits. Huxby sighted the cabin plane across the corner of the lake. He shouted and pointed to it, but waited for the second miner to come up before starting on along the trail. The fourth man of the party appeared up the stream bank.

Garth slipped back behind thick cover and swung into a fast pace. He struck the stream bank above the ford. Trees cut off all view of the four trackers. Garth crossed the ice in the open stream bed and found cover again on the west bank. But instead of heading up the gulch, he kept straight on, parallel with the lake shore.

He held to a fast pace. There was a chance that the trailers might lose time in trying to get aboard the cabin plane. But Huxby was no fool. He would know that the plane would be easy to reach after the sludge had frozen. In all probability, he would at once flounder on along the snowshoe trail with all his men.

The thought of Lilith amused him. She had been seen only by the miner who had fired down from timberline. At the distance she must have been mistaken for a man. Only a degenerate criminal would knowingly shoot at a woman. But her short snowshoe trail following his own and Dillon's must have shown the trailers that the third member of his party was as helpless as the dead or wounded constable.

They would be perplexed to guess what had become of his two companions. No man could make off with two persons on his back. Even if Huxby had guessed the truth that Dillon was dead and his body aboard the cabin plane, he would be mystified by the puzzle of the third person who, with the snowshoe-runner, had been kept from boarding the plane.

Still smiling, Garth came to the placer camp. The big fire under the gravel-thawing kettles had died down to a bed of coals. The forelegs and hindquarters of the newly killed moose lay in the snow beside the brush leanto. On the floor mat of spruce sprays, along with the bedding, was a pile of food—bacon, flour, sugar, dried fruit, tea. Back of the food were tight-lidded cans filled with dynamite, coils of fuse, and caps.

Garth jerked up the blankets. Under one set lay the strong canvas bag for which he was looking. He had hoped to find the constable's rifle. But one of the miners must have come to the valley without a gun. The carbine had not been left in camp.

The failure to find the weapon did not alter Garth's plans. Working fast, he filled the three-gallon teapot with packages of tea, salt and sugar. The pot went into an empty flour sack, along with a little dried fruit, some dynamite, and a pair each of tin cups, plates and spoons.

On the big stack of fuel beside the leanto, he piled all the rest of the food and dynamite, the blankets, and the quarters of moose. With a shovel that was leaning against the rocker cradle he tossed coals from the fire into the base of the stack. The wood soon blazed up in several places.

With the floursack pack and the bag of platinum alloy slung over his shoulder, he went downslope.

Garth lugged the sack across the open space and past the stunted spruce beside which Constable Dillon had been murdered. In a drift on the north side of the next tree, he dug a hole, dropped in the sack of alloy, and covered it over.

A backward look at the camp showed the bonfire flaming high. At any moment the frozen dynamite was apt to thaw enough to explode. From off to the left came angry shouts. The direction of Garth's trail had at last warned the pursuers of his raid on their camp. They were heading for it as fast as they could flounder through the drifts.

Instead of circling to double past them again, Garth skirted off down along towards the west side of the lake. There was no need to warn them about the dynamite. Before he had taken a dozen strides, the frosty air crashed with a thundering explosion. He bent forward and went pounding downhill through the soft snow as if breaking trail for a fast driven dog team.

When he neared the border of the muskeg he glimpsed a gray shape in the outer fringe of willows. No wolf could bulk so large. The she-grizzly had been first of the flesh eaters to find what was left of the newly killed moose.

Close looking and listening showed that the cubs of the great bear were not with her. Garth went straight towards the hoggishly feeding beast until she caught his scent. She reared up to gape her bloody jaws and roared as she had roared at him and Huxby and Mr. Ramill.

Garth very quietly turned to the left and angled off away from her. He was the two-legged creature who had several times shied respectfully around her and her cubs during the summer. She watched him go, then returned to her greedy gorging.

He skirted along the border of the muskeg to where a narrow neck of the swamp extended up a little valley to a gulch in the side of the west mountain.

At the far bank he shifted sideways and crouched down behind a clump of willows. He did not have long to wait. Enraged by the destruction of their food and camp outfit, Huxby and his men must have rushed fast down the trail of their bedeviler.

From over across the corner of the muskeg came the warning roar of the disturbed grizzly. A quick shot followed. Close upon the report dinned an outburst of terrific snarling roars and a whole fusillade of shots. The roars suddenly ceased. But the firing kept up for four or five seconds.

"Scared. Wasting cartridges," Garth told himself. "Hopping mad at me, and, atop that, flurried by her charge. Hope she didn't get any of them."

His wish was soon fulfilled. All four trailers came plodding along the border of the muskeg. Huxby was in the lead. But the bearded man next behind shoved forward beside him as he came striding out on the bog. Both happened to step two or three times on niggerheads. Then the miner hit the snow between tussocks.

The bearded man's curse as he plunged down into the quagmire jerked Huxby's glance around. He saw the trap a split second too late to keep on the tussocks. Like the miner, he shot down through the frozen crust into the deep slime and mud. The third man followed suit. But he was near shore, where the bog was only knee-deep. The fourth, lagging behind, halted on solid ground.

At Huxby's shouted orders, the last man ran to fetch poles of down timber. The two leaders were in almost to their armpits before the dead aspen trunks could be brought and shoved out to them.

Set on niggerheads, the poles gave support for the trapped men to pull themselves up out of the treacherously sucking quagmire. Other poles made a bridge for them, back to solid ground. But the bearded miner left his rifle down in the ooze.

Garth chuckled and looked to see Huxby backtrail with his men. Instead, the engineer headed up the bog valley towards the gulch. That added to Garth's mirth. By a quick return, the hunters could have stripped off the grizzly's hide before it froze. They were walking away from a rug that would have gone far towards replacing their burnt blankets. He had so tantalized and enraged them that they could think only of revenge.

To add insult to injury, he tramped a heavy trail up into a spruce thicket and built a small fire. Beside the fire he scattered a handful of dried apricots and prunes. After that he skirted along the edge of the muskeg to its north end.

Here he came to where in ancient times, before it started to recede, the glacier had piled a big terminal moraine. This was the immense natural dam that held the lake in its bed.

Among the rocks of the rapids, on the slope of the lower valley below the falls, Garth made out the wreckage of Mr. Ramill's custom-built monoplane.

He worked his way down alongside the rapids to look closer at the wreck. What little had been left of the costly aircraft was not worth salvaging. But the tattered cover of one broken wing thrust up out of the white water within reach from the bank.

Garth started a fire of small sticks. He quenched it with damp moss, and used the charred stick ends to write on the wing fabrics:

"$5,000 reward for
V. HUXBY
Thief and Murderer."

CHAPTER XI

Female of the Species.

Shortly before noon, the four trailers appeared on the moraine. The man who had not been bogged led the way down. Another miner followed, then Huxby. The man who had lost his rifle lagged behind. The two leaders reached the broken monoplane wing. Garth saw them read the writing.

Huxby jumped down beside the miners, to stare at the offer of reward that branded him for what he was. With a curse, he ripped the tattered piece of fabric from the wing frame and flung it down into the foaming rapid.

The two men glanced furtively at each other. Huxby pointed to the trail on the opposite bank and signed for them to lead the way across. Neither moved. The first man cursed, and shouted his refusal:

"Jump them boulders? I ain't no lynx. I'm through trailing that devil."

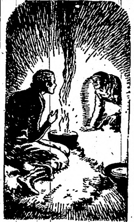
"Me too," declared the second man. "I won't break my neck for nobody."

A second look at the crossing forced Huxby to shout his agreement: "Curse the devil! We'll chase back. He's going on around to our plane. That's where he must have left both of his disabled companions."

Along with the angry statement, the engineer signed for his miners to start back ahead of him. Garth smiled. The two who had seen that offer of reward would not forget it, and Huxby was keenly aware of the fact.

When all four disappeared up on the moraine, Garth recrossed the boulders.

There was no sign of Lilith when he came down from the moraine. He called into the entrance tunnel.



A Quick Crawl Took Him in Through the Low Narrow Passage.

Back came a quavering cry of relief. A quick crawl took him in through the low narrow passage.

Lilith was breathing hard, almost gasping. "Oh! oh, thank God! I looked and looked, but I could not see you. I thought you must be—lying there—like that poor policeman—dead!"

"Hardly. Look here—and here." He showed the pistol, then dumped his floursack pack. "How about salt on our meat, and a cup of tea with sugar?"

"Alan!" she cried. "You made them give you all this!"

"In a way—yes. Set a pot of snow on the lamp stone, and slice some meat."

Lilith gazed at him in speechless wonderment, her blue eyes wide and very lustrous. He pretended not to notice. He salted and started to eat the first hot fat caribou steak that she served him on one of the looted tin plates.

But after he had told about the bear scare and the luring of the men into the bog, her surprise found utterance.

"Why didn't you kill the beasts while you had the chance?"

Garth answered with sudden gravity: "For several reasons, my girl. The main ones are because I am not a killer and because I intend that Vivian Huxby shall be tried and hung for murder."

She gasped: "You—hung! But he has all those men to help him. You're alone—worse than alone. I'm only a hindrance."

Soil Data

he has not shifted enough acres to qualify him for his maximum payment, then he could clip the oats or barley before heading on acreage sufficient to make up the [illegible] of his required 15 percent shift.

There seems to be quite a little confusion about the flax payment. Some regulations have been changed since the first educational meetings were held. Perhaps a brief statement will clear up some of the haze about the flax base. The payment will be 20c per bu. on the appraised yield for the number of acres seeded in 1936 It is possible to get a flax payment for all acreage grown on the farm this year regardless of whether any flax was produced on the farm last year, Mr Douglass says.

In order to get the flax payment there must be 20 percent of the flax acreage in soil conserving crops on the farm next fall. If there is sufficient acreage already in sweet clover or alfalfa, to be harvested for seed or hay, to equal 20 percent of the flax acreage then it will not be necessary to seed the required acreage to grass without a nurse crop. On the other hand if there are no soil conserving crops on the farm it will be necessary to shift the 10 percent of the flax acreage in addition to the 15 per cent shifted on the other soil depleting crops.

Assessors

of Thief River Falls had two errors in classification which have been corrected. One was due to the inability of the assessors to see the owner and get the status of the property and the other was due to the fact that the lady of the house stated that a certain stipulated amount was being paid as rent whereas it later developed that this amount was regular payment on a contract for deed. Be sure that all concerned are fully posted so that correct information can be given the assessors. The homestead law provides that up to $4,000 will have a lower assessed value where the owner lives on the property. On platted property this is 25 percent and 40 percent and on unplatted property it is 20 percent and 33 1-3 percent To show just how much correct classification means, let us assume there is a piece of platted property having a full and true valuation of $4,000 including lots and buildings. As a homestead this property would have an assessed valuation of $1,000, which is 25 percent of the full value. For example, with a rate of 100 mills the tax would be $100. This same property as non-homestead would be as follows: 40 per cent of the full value would make $1,600 assessed value. With the same 100-mill rate the taxes would amount to $160. Thus, it is easily seen that correct classification involves real money and should have the serious attention of every property owner.

The assessment is made as of May 1st, regardless of when the assessor calls, and regardless of whether the property changes hands later during the year, it is just this one day that governs the classification and assessment and it holds for two years, 1936-1937.

The assessors are beginning their work on May 1st and continue for two months. With thousands of descriptions of real estate, over two thousand in the city alone, for the assessors to properly classify this becomes an important and serious piece of work and the co-operation of the people of the County is earnestly requested.

Affidavits and forms are not necessary in this county to secure correct classification if the correct information is given the assessor, Mr. Senstad states.

No Shortage of Farm Labor, Says Bjornaraa

Reports circulated by the farm bureau federation last week to the effect that there is a shortage of farm labor was denied by Dreng Bjornaraa, state NRS administrator following a survey thru the NRS offices thruout the state, and this week reported to Victor Christgau, State WPA administrator.

In his report on the situation, Mr. Bjornaraa stated that there has been a lively demand for farm hands in a large part of the state, but that thus far, orders have been filled without difficulty. He added that offers of $30-$35 per month plus board and room are readily filled, altho in the Minneapolis and St. Paul offices of the NRS some difficulties have been experienced filling orders at $20-$25 a month.

Mr. Christgau said that WPA employment has been reduced from 65,000 on March 1, to approximately 56,000 on May 1, the reduction being in line with instructions from Washington to reduce gradually WPA employment to 46,000 by June 1st.

Pennington Old Age Pensions

April In the future he will of course get the full amount each month.

In the meantime a report from Washington seems to indicate that the report publicized with screaming headlines in the Minneapolis Tribune to the effect that the federal government has withdrawn from Minnesota the funds allotted because of Aitkin county's reported failure to comply with the old age assistance law, has been given the lie.

The Social Security Board at Washington announced that it has not withdrawn federal funds from Minnesota. If one county in the state consistently refuses to pay its share, federal funds will of course be withdrawn, the report states. However, the board takes the position that Aitkin county, if it has failed to make payments, has been unable to make them because of prolonged adverse weather conditions that have impoverished the county. All information available in Washington, it was stated, is to the effect that the Minnesota plan is being administered on a statewide basis and that it thus conforms with the federal law. There are three possibilities of providing Aitkin county with funds, Kenneth Haycraft, state administrator stated, and these are being considered. The Minnesota board of control can meet the situation by providing the defaulting county with funds from emergency relief or other funds, Mr. Haycraft stated. Aitkin county will be given ample time to meet all requirements the report states.

FORCED LABOR IN THE U. S.

The Miami News of March 21, 1936 printed an article saying, "A drive on unemployed Negroes in Dade County was begun yesterday in an effort to supply farmers of the county with labor. . The sheriff's office opened the campaign, sending deputies into the Negro sections and taking into custody all Negro men who were unable to give a good account of themselves. Two loads of them were taken to the county jail where, it is understood, they will be given the option of accepting employment on farms in the county or going to jail for 6 months. . . The sheriff's office indicated it would continue the drive until the labor needs of the farmers have been met."

Last fall in California 20 Migratory Worker's Camps were formed at strategic places near farms mines, factory and lumber districts, for the confinement of laborers under military discipline. Scattered Migratory Worker's Camps have been reported in other states, as well as plans for establishing then in every state in the union.

A DAY IN THE LIVES OF REFUGEES

AS A CONSEQUENCE of the Nurembung laws, which literally mean an economic death to "non-Aryans," thousands of Jews and non-Jews have fled from Germany. Not since the World War have the nations of Europe witnessed such an exodus of desperate, penniless refugees.

From America, financial support to refugee shelters and rehabilitation stations in France, Holland, Czecho-Slovakia, Austria and provision for aid to Jews in Germany has been made chiefly through the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee. At the bottom is shown an uprooted family of German Jews seeking shelter in an already overcrowded J. D. C. sustained refugee station in France. Center left shows a refugee family alighting in Metz, France. At the top is shown a J. D. C. supported food station in Poland where the economic plight of the Jew is as desperate as in Germany.

Under the leadership of Felix M. Warburg, New York banker and philanthropist, the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, 100 East 42nd Street, New York City, is conducting for 1936 a national campaign for $3,500,000 to continue its activities of relief and reconstruction in behalf of needy and oppressed Jews in Central and Eastern Europe.

Leaders in the United States have set that sum as the irreducible minimum necessary to continue that organization's program of aid for Jews of Germany, refugees who have fled to France, Holland, Czecho-Slovakia and other countries, and the millions in Poland, Roumania and other East European countries.

As part of its program the J. D. C. will contribute toward the program involving $15,000,000 of which $10,000,000 is to come from America, which it is hoped will enable over a four-year period approximately 20,000 to 25,000 employable young Jews yearly to emigrate from Germany.

Since 1933 the J. D. C. has spent approximately $2,000,000 for help to Jews in Germany and in refugee lands. Many non-Jews are among those receiving this aid. In the past 21 years it has raised and disbursed over $84,000,000 to aid several millions of Jews in more than 50 nations. It is acknowledged to be the dominant Jewish philanthropic organization in the world.

New Bird Magazine Tells of the Local Duck Tragedy of Last Fall

A new magazine devoted to Minnesota ornithology published at St. Cloud describes the duck disaster which occurred in this city last fall in its first issue released on Saturday, May 2nd.

The new journal, the first of its kind in the world is edited by John J. Cochrane of St. Cloud for the T. S. Roberts Ornithology club of that city, and the story dealing with the local duck tragedy was written by Dr. Thomas S. Roberts, director of the Minnesota Museum of Natural History.

The doctor quotes a letter from Conrad V. Hovie of this city and relates how two warm days drew ducks in full flight from the north only to be caught in the blizzard of snow and sleet on October 30th, which beat the birds to the ground. The article tells of how the reflection in the sky from the city's lights attracted the ducks by the thousands and states that "the air was full of quacks and crashes as the birds struck the ground and were killed or crippled."

The article recalls how the residents of the city and neighboring farming community woke up in the morning to find fields and streets full of dead and disabled ducks The article estimated fatalities among the ducks, most of which were northern bluebills at around 4,000 birds.

FRAZIER - LEMKE BILL COMES UP FOR VOTE MON.

Defeat of Pennsylvania Solon Brings Five Signatories

TWO YEARS LABOR BRINGS RESULTS

Lemke Predicts House Passage by a Large Majority

The Frazier-Lemke farm refinancing bill, so long a subject of controversy and dispute, will be brought up in the House for debate and a record vote within a few days after this appears in print, as readers will likely have learned already. The petition was completed, and administration leaders have given their definite promise that no effort will be made by parliamentary trickery or other obstructive tactics to delay the showdown any longer. As a result it will be called up very likely on the second Monday of the month under the rule that so provides.

Supporters of the bill are naturally jubilant. The struggle for names to complete the petition that would take the bill away from the Rules committee, where it was gathering dust, had reached the point where the approaching adjournment date of this Congress and the attitude of Chairman O'Connor of the Rules committee and other leaders had taken much of the heart out of those who were waging the fight. If an additional Member or two affixed his name, joy was short-lived because others would be found to have authorized removal of their names Day after day the same story was recorded, until the first of this week a primary election was held in Pennsylvania.

There the Democratic State organization defeated one of its own men, liberally inclined—Rep. Berlin, who had been one to remove his name at the behest of House leaders earlier in the session. For that he had also been roundly criticized by Father Coughlin and his league, and, caught between the fires, he went down to defeat, and returned bitter and resentful. He then told Rep. Lemke and the writer that if the necessary other Members could be found, he would sign the last needed space on the petition. Hurried work on the

SOIL MEETINGS TO BE HELD ON MAY 8-9-12-13

Additional Information Will Be Given To Farmers at New Meetings

Progress in the new Soil Conservation program is advancing as rapidly as can be expected. Work sheets on practically all farms in the County have been submitted, County Agent R. M. Douglass stated this week.

There seems to be several different ideas about the program. This is no doubt due to the fact that bad roads and weather prevented many farmers from attending any of the educational meetings.

Mr. Douglass, has scheduled another set of educational meetings to start on Friday of this week. He believes that attendance will be much greater now that roads and weather are more favorable. These meetings will give everyone an opportunity to hear the program explained correctly.

It will be to every farmers advantage to attend one of these meetings and clear up any questions that may be bothering him at this time.

Following is a schedule of meetings: All meetings will start promptly at 8 p. m.

Air Training Bill Passes Congress

Washington, D. C.—(YNS)— A routine bill is passed in the House of Representatives. It affects the life of every young man in the United States, but the Congressmen didn't know what it contained!

The bill may mean intensive training in military aviation for thousands of young men between the ages of 17 and 24 in colleges and Civilian Conservation Corps camps, yet it passed through the House without a single dissenting vote.

By a strange coincidence, almost all of the liberal congressmen were not at hand when the bill came before the House. Representative Hill was seriously ill. Representative Amlie was busy helping a "good cause", and Rep. Maverick was preparing on an attack on militarist although the bill (H. R. 11969) has been labeled the handiwork of the same parties he was "preparing to attack". Other liberal Congressmen were also occupied and when queried by a Youth News Service reporter, they could only stare and ask "What bill?"

The introduction of the bill has been accompanied by strange maneuvers, motivated according to informed sources, by a desire to avoid the strong criticism of similar bills aimed at militarizing young Americans.

Although it is customary to hold open public meetings on new bills, only executive hearings were held on the bill introduced by Rep McSwain, (D., N. C.) to which only committee members and those invited to testify were admitted.

More than 300 aviation company officials and army officers were secretly approached about the bill by Rep. McSwain, who is Chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee Among those consulted were C. J. Bruckner, president of the Waco Aircraft Company; Walter H. Beech, president of the Beech Aircraft Co., Louis R. Inwood of the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce; Bernarr McFadden, physical culturist and publisher; Dudley M. Steel, chairman of the Aeronautics Commission of the American Legion and others. The aviation company officials have much to gain in the way of business through the bill.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of War to "organize a civilian reserve component for the U. S. Army", to be officially called the "Air Reserve Training Corps", and to take other steps. Young men between the age of 17 and 24 who are high school graduates will be recruited and, in order to make the proposition even more attractive, they "shall be entitled to receive such emblem or designation to wear upon the clothing as the Secretary of War may prescribe. ."

The Secretary of War is also empowered to "coordinate said instruction with courses in any college or university". All graduates will be kept listed as to their addresses, business occupations and other pertinent facts, reads the bill, "so that many may be available on shortest notice for service in the national defense in the event of a national emergency".

The bill, is also said to have the Administration's backing and is therefore likely to pass in the Senate

Crime Costs U. S. 14 Billion a Year

The Osborne Association, nationally-known statistical organization, estimates that crime cost the people of the United States 14 billions in 1935. This does not include anything for the loss of the productive ability of the persons who are incarcerated in penal institutions, nor anything for the moral losses imposed upon society by crime and criminals.

J. Edgar Hoover, the far-famed head G-man, goes the Osborne Association one better and puts the total national crime burden at 15 billions, and suggests, fantastically, that the criminals of the nation make a two-year truce with the government, and that we use the saving to liquidate our national debt, which is about 30 billions.

The United States Statistical Abstract, which is the official record of national finances, states that, for the last year of record the national income totalled 48 1-2 billions, which shows that we spent for the luxury (!) of crime 28.8c out of every dollar of income.

Currently with these startling revelations comes the plea of Sanford Bates, director of Federal prisons, who states that from June 30, 1934 which was the first June under repeal, to June 30, 1935 the population of Federal penal institutions increased 25 percent! And that, despite the fact that several new prisons have been opened, the capacity of them is already taxed, and that still more must be provided.

This is a sharp contrast with the report issued by the Census department in 1923, three years after prohibition became effective, which showed decreases in commitments for:

Drunkenness	55.3 pct.
Vagrancy	52.8 pct.
Assault	53.1 pct.
Fraud	55 7 pct.
Disorderly conduct	51.5 pct.
Larceny	42.3 pct.
Burglary	11.4 pct.
Gambling	50.7 pct.
All Crimes	37.7 pct.

Mr. Hoover's truce suggestion is impossible. But the Federal records show a practical remedial measure. National Prohibition, even tho scandalously mal-administered, did reduce prison population substantially more than one-third in its first three years.

Half Million Students Strike Against War

New York, N. Y.—(YNS)— Half a million college and high school students took time off from classes to stage the third annual peace strike last week.

From classrooms and lecture halls, they flocked to outdoor demonstrations, indoor assemblies and chapel meetings on more than four hundred campuses throughout the country In striking contrast to last year's strikes, in which 175-000 took part, no serious violence was reported, anti-strikers contenting themselves for the most part with staying in classes or quietly dissenting.

Administrative authorities at many schools called off all scheduled classes or made room for the strike on the regular program. At Swarthmore, Vassar, the University of North Carolina, and Wayne University among others, the entire student body participated as a group.

Added color and dramatic flavor was furnished the demonstrations this year by the newly-formed Veterans of Future Wars and their Ladies Auxiliary. On numerous campuses they joined the anti-war meetings.

The strike at Columbia University featured a Veterans of Future Wars parade by 500 young men and women who presented a bitter burlesque of modern warfare. The parade, witnessed by 5000 spectators, was led by a fifty-piece band whose drum-major flourished a crutch instead of a baton. Signs carried by the marchers proclaimed that "You, too, can learn to play a machine gun", "Spend your bonus here; not hereafter", and "We want a trip overseas to see our future sons' graves".

About 25,000 were estimated to have joined the student strike in New York City and at least twice as many more attended peace assemblies organized by principals in city schools.

One of the few scenes of disorder occurred at Temple University in Philadelphia, where a flying squadron of young men upset the speakers' stand and hurled rotten tomatoes. The rioters were quickly quieted and the meeting continued. Police at Tenafly, N. J., broke up a high school outdoor rally by "kidnapping" the scheduled speaker, the Rev. E T. Buehrer, and holding him for more than an hour.

At the University of California at Los Angeles, scene last year of some of the worst disorders and instances of police violence, 2,000 students held a peaceful demonstration, dissociated from the nationwide movement. In many other meetings that day, the Oxford Oath, pledging students not to support the United States government in any war it may conduct, was taken by many of the participants.

The strike was initiated and sponsored this year by the American Student Union, in whose program the Oxford Pledge is an important plank.

Women's Camp to be Held at AC June 8-11

The Eleventh Annual Women's Camp will be held on the Northwest School campus during the second week in June. Activities will open Monday evening June 8 and close Thursday noon, June 11. Registrar J. W. Mlinar and Miss Retta Bede anticipate one of the best attended meetings in recent years as a number of former campers have already made room reservations.

In arranging the program, every effort has been made to insure a happy combination of educational, inspirational, and recreational features. There will be many discussions dealing with home work and home interests. The recreational program will not only emphasize games in the home and community life, but also the need for rest and recreation.

The total expense for board, room and entertainment will be three dollars.

The following officers, who were elected at the close of the 1935 camp, will assist with the activities of the week: Mrs. G. K. Hovie, Thief River Falls, president; Mrs. C. H. Roholdt, Mayville, North Dakota, vice president; Mrs. E. E. Green, Crookston, secretary; Mrs. Emma Wright, Middle River, treasurer! and Mrs. Gus Gustafson, of Crookston, sergeant at arms

The camp provides women of Northwestern Minnesota the opportunity of enjoying a four-day vacation among ideal surroundings and combines, with the vacation idea an educational program that has proven to be most helpful and valuable to homemakers. Members of the Northwest School staff will be assisted by numerous speakers and demonstrators interested in home and community activities.

Wheat Farmers Lose to Millers

The farmer's share of the consumer's dollar spent for bread and flour has been cut in half during the last 16 years, according to the May issue of Facts for Farmers.

Using figures from the U. S. Department of Agriculture Farm Research in its bulletin Facts for Farmers points out that the farmer got 35c out of every dollar spent by the consumer on bread in 1919, but his share had fallen to 17c in 1935. The farmer got 70c out of every dollar spent for flour in 1919 but only 40c in 1935.

While the value of wheat last year was 41 percent lower than in 1929, the large millers and bakers have succeeded in maintaining their high earning throughout the depression and drought. General Mills, Inc., the largest flour producing company in the world, showed profits in 1919 of $4,154,786. Its profits have continued at this level, last year they amounted to $4.075,251 without including the large refund of processing taxes. Its working capital has doubled despite the depression.

Farm Research finds that the federal system of grading wheat lacks scientific validity; it measures neither the milling nor the baking quality of the wheat. It enables the large millers to buy good wheat at bargain prices and permits large profits to be made by the terminal elevators through such practices as mixing grades and juggling classes. The burden of the federal grading system falls most heavily on the smaller farmers who have the most difficulty in meeting the grade 1 requirements.

Last year price spreads between the various grades widened sharply. It was claimed that the lightweight wheat gave less flour and made inferior bread Farm Research states that the prices paid for the lighter weight wheat were entirely out of line with its flour yield and points to tests made by the Government proving that this wheat made "good bread."

Civil Service Warns Against False Claims

Washington, D. C.—The United States Civil Service Commission has sent a notice to post offices, warning that misleading information is being given the public by representatives of some of the correspondence schools which sell "civil service" courses.

For a long time, the Commission has been receiving complaints from different parts of the country which indicate that opportunities for obtaining Federal employment have been greatly exaggerated.

It was made clear that no school has any connection whatever with the Civil Service Commission or with any other branch of the Government and also that the Commission has no agents who solicit applications for civil service positions or who sell "civil service" courses.

No school can "guarantee" Government employment and none is given information regarding examinations, or any other information which is not available to the general public. The Commission stated that it does not recommend any school, and explained that it is not necessary for anyone to take a course with a so-called civil service school in order to compete in

A special point was made of the fact that information concerning examinations may be obtained at any time, without cost, from the Secretary of the Civil Service Board at any first or second-class post office or from the Commission's office in Washington, D. C.

LET US LOOK AT THE RECORDS

In view of the "liberal" platform adopted by the Minnesota republicans one would be led to believe that our republican friends are indeed the "party of Lincoln". However platform and campaign promises are meaningless unless they are lived up to. Last week we pointed out some facts from the record which would belie the sudden friendship of the republican party for labor. At this time we will take a few more excerpts from their platform and compare them with their past performance.

Platform:

"The elimination of confiscatory taxes upon home and farm is imperative. We urge a fair and equitable distribution of the tax burden, based upon the ability to pay . . . ."

Performance:

When the net income tax passed the House for the first time in the 1933 session 101 members voted yea, 11 voted nay, all republicans. Here they are: Brophey, Campbell, C. A. Dahle, Finstuen, Hitchcock, Kueffner, Norton, Paige, Rosenberg, Weeks and Wright.

When it passed the Senate the vote was 49 yeas and 17 nays: Here are the nays: C. E. Adams, E. E. Adams, Anderson, Bonniwell, Child, Farnand, Fearing, Lewer, Lightner, Marshall, Mullin, Orr, Ribenack, Rockne, Rollins, Sullivan and Widell. Sixteen of them republicans.

In the 1935 session 38 senators voted against increases in the inheritance tax. 36 of them were republicans. 26 voted for the increase, only two of them were republicans. Forty-one senators voted against increasing the income tax. All of them were republicans. 37 senators voted for the Omnibus Tax Bill including the sales tax. All of them were republicans.

In the House, 71 Dunn republicans voted for the sales tax. 65 of them voted against increasing the inheritance tax. 71 of them voted for the Omnibus Bill with the sales tax.

Platform:

"The republican party has always practiced economy in public affairs. Thrift and economy are necessary to the successful ordering of the life of an individual or the functions of government . ."

Performance:

Theo. Christianson was the last republican governor of Minnesota. He is generally recognized as the acme of Minnesota republican economy. He sanctioned an appropriation of $25,000 to give Rufus Hitchcock and two other republican legislators a junket of the east as an interim committee. But, he opposed payment of the supplementary school aid.

"Governor Christianson has contributed his share to the tax burden to the shoulders of the people by unloading it from the shoulders of those who were able to pay. Note his action in 1925 of reducing the tax classification of bank stock from 40 percent to 33 1-3 percent, creating a potential deficit of $400,000.00 which must be defrayed by an increased tax on farm and home property." from the 1929 biennial report of the Railroad Brotherhoods State Legislative board.

Christianson as congressman has opposed payment of the soldiers bonus and he has opposed social security legislation and unemployment insurance on the ground that we can't afford it but he failed to raise his voice against appropriating $1,000,000,000.00 (yes, it's one billion) for army and navy purposes. Christianson has opposed the Frazier-Lemke Bill, but he has not as yet by word or deed criticized the loan of $80,000,000.00 made by the republican administration of the RFC to Chas. Dawes. He did not raise his voice against Mellon's refunding of millions in income taxes to the large taxpayers. Neither has any of his fellows in the republican oligarchy objected. He has carefully avoided reference to the Tea Pot Dome scandal perpetrated under a republican administration.

Republican economy in the administration of the Rural Credit Bureau is well known. Some of the republican "economists" from that administration are serving, or have served time in state prison.

Platform:

"We indorse the old age pension law passed by the special session of the legislature as a sound beginning of a state-wide old age pension system."

Performanee:

The republican senate boss, Rockne, tacked on the amendment which invalidated the old age pension in the regular session of the legislature and made necessary a special session. The republicans voted for his amendment.

In the special sessions, 34 senators (the republican group) voted for a lien provision in the old age pension law. 46 voted against increasing the payments. In the House, 52 (republicans) voted for the property lien clause. Forty-six republican house-members voted against an adequate relief appropriation.

Platform:

"The republican party was instrumental in enacting the first child labor law in Minnesota, and we propose its further extension wherever necessary."

Performance:

36 House members voted against ratification of the federal constitutional child labor amendment. One was a farmer-laborite, three were democrats and 32 were republicans. Among them Roy E. Dunn and Hitchcock, acknowledged leaders. Twenty-one senators voted against it. All republicans.

Platform:

"We favor the principle of unemployment reserves."

Performance:

In the 1933 session; when the unemployment insurance bill came up on special order in the House, Wright, Hitchcock, Quinlivan, O. K. Dahle and Sweitzer, all republicans led the attack upon it and finally killed it. A republican controlled senate kept it from coming to a vote in that house.

In the special session of 1935; 52 house members voted against unemployment insurance. All republicans except three who are classed as democrats. 36 senators voted against the bill and killed it. 32 of them were republicans.

The republicans subscribe to the philosophy of rugged individualism. They believe in the survival of the shrewdest and keenest. Or even the most unscrupulous. They oppose the taxation of business. They are not concerned with economy except when it hits business. They believe in passing the tax burden to the little fellow and the masses in general. They oppose old age pensions and every other forms of pension or social security legislation believing that it behooves each of us to provide for our own future. They oppose minimum hours laws, child labor laws and other forms of regulation and restrictions on business.

We number among our personal friends and acquaintances many republicans and while we do not agree with their political philosophy which we abhor as cruel and inhuman, we nevertheless respect them for their sincere convictions. It is worthy of note that none of them truckle with the present republican leadership that is willing to stoop to deceit, fraud, lies, perjury and character assassination in order to satisfy their lust for office and power. They are not in accord with the oligarchy at present in control of local, state or national republican destinies.

We honor them for their integrity if not for their economic philosophy, they refuse to go before the voters under false pretenses.

THE SUPREME COURT GOES HOUDINI

Conservatives are pointing with a great deal of satisfaction to the fact that the Minnesota supreme court went against Governor Olson in the corporate excess tax case. To the conservative mind, this of course proves that the governor was wrong for conservative minds have a habit of looking with reverence and awe at anyone who wears a gown, whether it be the purple robe of potentates or the black nightshirt of a supreme court justice. Which proves that as a nation we inherited not only the disregard of pomposity of the revolutionary fathers, but also the servile worship of temporal authority of the lackadaisical tories.

However, having known some of the justices of the Minnesota supreme court when they were just smart small-town lawyers we are unable to muster any great awe of them such as might be inspired in the minds of slaves by the Oracle of Delphi. In our mind they are still just fairly smart attorneys and not much more. In other words, we have observed reputedly clever lawyers make assinine statements in court and hand down ridiculous decisions before and the decision of the supreme court in this case surprises us no more than if the decision had been handed down by seven day laborers. Their argument that the corporate excess tax has been "repealed by implication" is so flimsy and ridiculous that it would take six lawyers to make it, unless we are to assume that the court is possessed with clairvoyant powers.

Certainly the fact that the same property is taxed by other taxes which have been laid on by subsequent legislatures does not prove that the legislature intended to repeal the corporate excess any more than that the federal net income tax should be considered repealed because the legislature applied another income tax on top of it. Nor yet that the state gasoline tax should be considered repealed because the federal government has since levied an additional tax on the same gasoline sales.

Chief Justice Devaney in his dissenting opinion says: "If the rule of judicial repeal is to stand, it will not only serve the purpose of defeating reform, but may even accomplish the overthrow of popular rights which the constitution guarantees."

To our mind the governor has by far the best of the argument, and the supreme court has only succeeded in making itself ridiculous.

A VICIOUS PROPOSAL
(Minnesota Leader)

The Minneapolis Tribune reprimands the Farmer-Labor convention for opposing Constitutional Amendment No. 2 (Youngquist amendment). The Tribune says that the Farmer-Laborites would relieve the tax burden on real property by increasing taxes on incomes and inheritances ((despite the demonstrable fact that these taxes would not produce the needed revenue."

If our capitalist-minded contemporary is right in asserting that not enough revenue can be produced by means of taxes on incomes and inheritances, how then can it justify adoption of an amendment that would do away with the state levy on property? Or are we to understand that the additional revenue is to be raised by means of a sales tax?

That is, of course, just what the Tribune wants. The politicians and newspapers advocating adoption of the Youngquist amendment have that tax program in mind. They want to create a situation that will literally compel the state legislature to enact a law taxing retail sales.

And there is no tax so unfair to the small owner of real property as the sales tax. The Research Bureau of the Kansas State Legislative Council has revealed the iniquity of the sales tax. According to the Kansas research body a 2 per cent tax on retail sales would fall most heavily on those with small incomes.

For example:

A man with an income of $1,000 would pay a tax of $12.18 cents; a man with an income of $10,000 would pay at the rate of $6.34 per $1,000, and a man with a $100,000 income would pay at the rate of $3.10 per $1,000.

Could anything be more inequitable? Can the tax problem of the farmer, worker or small business man be solved by substituting a sales tax for one taxing property? To ask the question is to answer it.

The sales tax in infinitely more unfair and inequitable to the man of limited means than is the general property tax. The sales tax would, to be sure, lighten the taxes of the large real estate owners and they are the ones the Tribune is thinking about.

The Leader opposes the Youngquist amendment as a vicious proposal to relieve big property owners and to increase the tax burden of the common folks. Work against this villainous amendment from now until next November. And on election day vote "No" on Amendment No. 2!

Christianity on the Nazi Cross

HITLER'S WAR AGAINST CHRISTIANITY

The Nazi regime in Germany has brought death and destruction not only to organized labor, liberals, the Jewish minority, pacifists and other progressive groups. From its very first day relentless warfare has been waged against the Christian religion in all its forms. The establishment of the Third Reich has been accompanied by unceasing agitation against, and brutal suppression of the Christian churches.

Strange as it may sound the Nazi party—the creation of Adolf Hitler who is a Catholic himself—has always agitated strongly against Catholicism and the Catholic Church in German. To Nazi minds "red" trade unionism as well as "black" Catholicism—the main pillars of the democratic Republican regime of Germany—were responsible for Germany's war defeat and her distress since 1918.

It was therefore quite evident that the dissolution of the democratic and labor forces—including those of 1,200,000 Catholic trade unionists organized in the Christian Trade Unions—had to be followed by the destruction of the Center Party, the political representation of German Catholicism. From then on their's has been an uninterrupted road to Calvary. The Vatican consented to the sacrifice of the Center Party in order to preserve the existence of the purely religious cultural and social institutions of the Catholic Church in Germany. A Concordat was concluded by which Catholicism foreswore political activity but was allowed to continue its spiritual and social work.

The hopes of the Catholics, however, for tranquility and a speedy recovery of order were ill-founded. A short time later the fight broke out again, mainly for the reason that the Nazis were not content with striking a blow at the political convictions of the Catholics. They were out to put an end to all Catholic organizations, including its Youth movement, its schools and its press, and they made no bones about it. And when the Catholics and their spokesmen courageously rose in defense of their institutions, the Nazi tyranny showed its iron fist, murdered Catholic leaders during the famous blood purge of June 1934, and had many priests arrested by the brown shirted mercenaries.

1935 was filled with violent persecutions of the Churches in Germany. The fury of the Nazi attacks on Catholicism was unleashed in April when the Hitler Regime started to arrest and jail priests, monks and nuns on alleged charges of violating the foreign exchange laws. The main intent of these actions was of course to discredit the Catholic Church. For the same reason, the trials were cunningly spread throughout the whole year, so as to constantly dangle before the public eye the danger of Catholicism while the Nazi press indulged in a never ending stream of vilification.

Another chapter of this pamphlet deals at length with the monstrous sentences meted out to Catholic priests and the faithful. It should also be remembered that for the first time in 60 years—that is since the days of Bismarck's "Kulturkampf"—a Catholic Bishop was tried and heavily fined despite the overwhelming proof of his innocense. Confiscatory fines were imposed upon religious orders which had already been deprived of their leading minds by wholesale arrests the total of these fines up to the present has been so great as to seriously cripple, if not completely interrupt, the manifold religious cultural, and social activities of the Orders.

What with constant violations of the Concordat, attacks on Catholic Workmen's, Youth and Welfare Associations, the crippling of Catholic school activities, and the virtual prohibition of the Catholic press, the aim of the Hitler Government has become clear. If we add to this the growing persecution practiced against the Protestant church and its spokesmen, the trend towards paganism and the revival of anti-Christian forces is apparent.

A Pastoral Letter

To show the spirit prevailing in German Catholic ranks we quote the pastoral letter approved and made public by the Conference of the German Hierarchy at Fulda in 1935. The letter was read from the pulpits to all the faithful throughout the Reich. Besides stating the Catholic views on the sterilization laws and other equally important issues, the main contention against Nazism is summed up in the following memorable paragraph:

"Many times we have issued warnings in the hope that we might spare the German people another Kulturkampf, but in spite of our admonitions the struggle does not seem to lessen in its intensity. Our opponents are doing everything within their power to bring the Church into disrepute and to discourage youth from Christian Faith. Our Faith has withstood many storms, emerging victorious. The present struggles, too, will pass and the word of the Apostle will be confirmed."

All this went hand in hand with the brutal suppression of Catholic publications and severe measures against the slightest infractions of Nazis' laws and regulations. For instance, the well-known Jesuit Monthly magazine, "Stimmen der Zeit", was suppressed for four months because it had the audacity to disapprove editorially of the teachings of the Nazi Kultur Dictator Alfred Rosenberg.

Nazi Methods

The essentially anti-Christian character of the Nazi regime is perhaps best summed up in the words of Baldur von Schirach the Hitler Youth Leader, in rejecting the Catholic charges against the Nazis. He declared, "To be a Nation is the religion of our epoch."

An illustration of the methods which the Nazi rulers employ against their Catholic opponents was given in the school registration campaign late in 1935 in Munich. Thanks to their rigorously applied propaganda monopoly and their making full use of intimidation and economic pressure, the Nazis were able to claim a victory. The brutality of the Nazis was so pronounced that the Cardinal-Archbishop of Munich, Faulhaber, denounced them from the pulpit. He revealed that Catholic parents had been threatened with destitution if they sent their children to Catholic schools. Storm troopers were sent from house to house, complying with their noble mission of intimidating the people. Catholic meetings as well as literature and radio broadcasts were forbidden, while the Nazi propapaganda machine had full sway and flooded the city with the usual propaganda.

Minute Sermon

By Dr. Crawford Grays

Christianity stands for the welfare of the human trinity.

The human consists of a three-fold make up, physical, mental and moral. To be an all-round good citizen no part of this three-fold make up should be neglected either by the individual or by society, for the welfare of the human trinity is the corner stone of civilization.

The physical must have the proper sufficiency of food, clothing and shelter from the beginning—in babyhood, in old age, and all the way in between.

The mental must have the proper sufficiency of food clothing and shelter from the beginning and all through unto the end of its functioning processes. There are foods and protective influences for the mind no less than for the body. The individual must have the opportunity for wholesome mental food and likewise good sense to choose and apply it.

The moral must have the proper sufficiency of food, clothing and shelter. Every human should have the opportunity for the fullest development of character and never be in the position where ideals and principles must be sold to keep body alive.

The D. A. R.

The dear old ladies who comprise the D. A. R. have ripped away the masks which the ostensibly law-abiding and innocent Farmer-Laborites have heretofore worn, leaving those Moscow-inspired radicals to stand exposed as the wolves in sheeps' clothing that they are.

* * * *

It is chiefly to Mrs. Vinton Earl Sisson, chairman of the 'National Defense Committee' of the D. A. R. that the country is indebted for having thus unmasked the rogues and rapscallions. Indeed, had it not been for Mrs. Sisson and her untiring and patriotic sister-workers, the sculldu̇ggery might not have been dragged out into the open light of day until after everything had gone completely to pot.

Even now it is just nip and tuck that it isn't too late! For so craftily and insidiously have the Farmer-Laborites and their ilk bored from within that the whole national structure is suspected of having more holes in it than a last year's bathing suit in a moth-infested closet.

It was in a speech at the national convention of the D. A. R., held here in Washington recently, that Mrs. Sisson tootled her clarion call to her fellow patriots to stand firm against the enemy. .

"Radical  groups are organizing every Congressional district in the country for mass attack in the interest of undesirable legislation!" she cried.

The proposal of the radicals that the government should take over certain natural resources and to operate, for example, the public utilities, brought a veritable shudder from the estimable lady. For didn't the Socialists themselves, in their 'Workers' Rights Amendments' urge the same thing, she wanted to know. Of course they did!

And that, ipso facto made the proposal little less than treasonable to the super-patriotic D. A. R.

* * * *

She passed on to her hearers an alarming fact she and her alert committee had uncovered . . that there are, at this time, some 65 to 70 proposed amendments to the Constitution pending in Congress.

Now, it was apparently not the startling number of proposed amendments which so disturbed the lady. Nor did the changes the amendments contemplate seem to be of importance. At least, she didn't trouble to discuss more than one of them briefly. .

No, it was that the amendments were proposed by radicals who, while masquerading as respectable Republicans or Democrats, actually were Socialists, Communists or some such horrible thing.

And this, of course, was of itself quite enough to make them an abomination in the sight of the D. A. R.

* * * *

The origin of the country's present anti-war attitude was also traced to the sly radicals. .

It is not that the radicals are, on principle, sincerely opposed to war. In the secret recesses of their hearts they don't give a hang!

Nor do the gigantic sums the government is spending on war preparations interest them one whit, despite the hue and cry one hears from them.

It is none of these things. No, it is an insidious scheme to disarm the country, that it may the more easily fall a prey to the radicals, who, when the time is ripe, will attempt to turn it into another Soviet Russia.

The movement, here, there and everywhere, to mass all radicals under the Farmer-Labor banner, is a symptom of the huge wart which threatens to grow out on Uncle Sam's nose.

But thanks to the alertness of the D. A. R., the country is now fully alive to the danger and can take the necessary precautions.

But what if the country does nothing! - - If it persists in its apathy and indifference! . . .

Even then be not dismayed. For have we not still the D. A. R. to protect our kith and kin!

Tramp! tramp! tramp! the girls are marching.

"HAPPY DAYS" (?)

Many people sang, in all sincerity "Happy Days Are Here Again" when the 18th Amendment was repealed. Now they are learning to question that statement, as they see the increase in motor accidents during week-ends,—which should be "happy days",—or in the late afternoon,—which should be "happy hours",—and realize that in both cases the happiness of too many persons is being decreased by accidents due to liquor.

Try to figure out how many accidents due to liquor are not so recognized or reported. Few police forces are equipped to make the tests necessary to determine "intoxication". Yet scientists are demonstrtaing that the driver who has had only a drink or two,—just enough to dull his judgment and control while increasing his self-confidence,—is often more dangerous than the one who is obviously "drunk".

Letters to this department are invited. In order that more readers may express their opinions here, the Forum reserves the right to cut down the length of letters. It requests writers to limit themselves, whenever possible to 250 words or less. Name and address must accompany your letter, but will be omitted if desired. Letters signed with real names will have preference.

To the Editor:

I have noticed two articles in the Forum, written by Messrs. Van Pelt and Furuseth. They confess they are communists. As to Mr. Furuseth's article, his arguments are so loosejointed that I will not discuss them. Mr. VanPelt has carloads of good promises to give us if we would only turn to communism. He can outrun both the big national parties in giving good promises. But by this time we are quite well educated along the "good promises" line. Whether they come from our big parties or from communists we simply diagnose them as theoretical bunk.

Mr. VanPelt says: "There are two opposing clashing forces in the world today. On the one hand is the force of peace and a life of abundance and advances, as represented by the Union of Soviet Republic. On the other hand is the force of war, of hunger and of medievial darkness . . . the force of beastiality and war as represented by Hitler's German Fascism".

In answer to those statements, I will say that ignorance drips from every word. We know very well that the glorious "peace" now existing in Russia is created by the big red army and not by contentment among the people. Russia today is controlled by the strongest dictatorship in the world. The people have no other choice than to obey the dictators or be exiled, arrested or shot. Of course "peace" can be established that way, but it is not the kind of peace we want in America.

I agree with the communists, however, in denouncing capitalism as it has developed in what we call "Big Business". One does not have to be a communist to understand that our present capitalist system has become a dangerous dictator to the common people. The farmer-labor party wants these dangerous outgrowths of our present capitalist system corrected by the regular, orderly and peaceful method which our constitution prescribes, thru action by congress and our legislatures. But, we do not want to kill or exile the capitalists as they did in Russia.

I will admit tho, that the Russian aristocracy deserved the treatment they got during the revolution. The French got what they deserved during the French revolution. But we want to correct a tyrannical economic system by law and order. The Scandinavian Vikings had one great principle which led them in their political affairs, and that was: "By law shall country be established." This is also the leading principle in America. For that reason we will have nothing to do with modern communism.

'ADOPTED' PHEASANTS TRUST BENEFACTOR

Detroit Lakes—A farmer living north of Detroit Lakes has adopted a flock of 30 or 40 pheasants, the birds spending most of the day around the yard and receiving the best in food from their friend, who also proved their lifesaver the other day when a hawk attacked them. The farmer, dashing from his house to fire at the invader, declares the pheasants came running toward him for protection, and that when he shot his gun not one of them flew into the air. Apparently the birds know a sportsmen when they see one.

VIEWS AND REVIEWS

By Ben C. Hagglund

Logic Never Changes

Fifty years ago Carl Marx and Frederick Engels were expounding the theory that capitalism would be succeeded by socialism, in the natural logic of events. Individualism, as exemplified in early capitalism flourishes where there is plenty of room. When population becomes congested and people are thrown more intimately together, the need for a collective set of rules becomes necessary, and so we get socialism.

Marx and Engels knew that the capitalist class would not give up without a struggle. As a matter of fact, the capitalists invariably become class conscious before the working class does, and as a result perfect their organization sooner. This organization is carried to its logical extreme in fascism, modern examples existing in Italy and Germany. When fascism fails (as it must) there is no other course for society to pursue than that of socialism, for the condition which brought about fascism make any other kind of society impossible.

Marxism has not been outmoded. Events merely prove that it is more true than ever.

"Why Should I Vote for Hoover?"

It is sometimes amusing to dig up campaign promises of bygone years, for the discrepancies with actuality are often glaring. Thus, in the 1932 presidential campaign the Republican National Committee set forth these reasons why Hoover should be re-elected:

1. He created the Home Loan Banks.

2. He created the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The benefits derived from Home Loan Banks were cited thus; a borrower was treated more leniently under that setup than he would be under a private set up. As a matter of fact, the exact opposite was often true; because the government loan agency became a bloodless machine, bent on "rehabilitation," which often meant closing out the unfortunate borrower who could not meet his payments. On the other hand, the private loan agency would often wait for more auspicious times than close out and take a loss.

The leaflet tells of the benefits to be derived from the R. F. C. and this no doubt is old stuff to the reader, but the principal benefit derived from the R. F. C. in the public mind, was the $80,000,000 "gift" to Charles G. Dawes' Chicago bank, which was never repaid.

It is worthy of note that when Roosevelt assumed reins of power, a bank holiday was immediately declared; people afterwards discovered that for several weeks the financial structure of the country was in ruins, and that a complete new system had to be built up, which accounted for the devaluated dollar and going off the gold standard. Hoover's R. F. C. contributed heavily to the conditions which made this action necessary.

Thus, to the questions asked by the pamphlet, "Why Should I Vote for Hoover? What has he done for me?" one can only answer "I wonder!"

Ethiopia at Bay

Mussolini's civilized wolves are closing in on their Ethiopian quarry; and if successful in making a kill, the world will see another example of civilization being rammed down the throats of unwilling "barbarians". What does it matter if they use poison gas (despite the edict of the League of Nations condemning it), bomb Red Cross hospitals, use scientific air attacks to launch crushing offensives, and hunt out everyone who crosses their path—as long as in the end the country may enjoy the benefits of civilized fascism?

ALL OUT

It was 2 a. m. when the club telephone rang, and a bachelor member answered it.

Angry Feminine Voice—Is my husband there?

Bachelor—No, he's gone home.

Voice (snapping)—How do you know? I didn't even tell you his name!

Bachelor—You didn't need to. When this phone rang every married man in the place grabbed his hat and ducked out.

Abreast of the Period

"Don't hear of any horse thieves and cattle rustlers around Crimson Gulch," said the man who had returned after a long absence.

"No," replied Piute Pete. "The place has been progressin' right along with other towns. Now we have to organize fellows that repaint automobiles and change the numbers on 'em."

Undaunted Though Frivolous

"Your enemies conspire to bring your gray hairs in sorrow to the grave."

"They haven't a chance," said Senator Sorghum. "I am bald-headed and I don't wear whiskers."

He Should Know

Motorist—I've had it a whole year and I haven't paid a cent for repairs or upkeep on my car since I bought it.

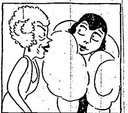
TIME TELLS



Miss Fear—My only fear for the future is from the fact that my fiance is just a little younger than I am.

Too Bad for Johnnie

Little Willie—Ma, can me and Johnnie have some cake?

Ma—Not until you ask for it grammatically, Willie.

Willie—Well, then, mother, can I have some cake?—Pathfinder Magazine.

The Cheap One

"How much iss dose collars, please?" asked the customer.

"Two for a quarter."

"Yes, and how much iss vun?"

"Fifteen cents."

"All rite," was the reply. "Giff me the odder vun."

Anticipation

"I'm happy and all that, of course, old chap; still I wish my wife wouldn't talk so much about her last husband. It worries me."

"Forget it. Mine's always talking about her next one."

Appreciation

"You have some remarkable paintings."

"Yes," replied Mrs. Comrox. "The art dealer said they were old masters, but to my eye some of them look as good as new."

Truthful

First Mother—Are you bothered much by your children telling fibs?

Second Mother—Not so much as by their telling the truth at very inappropriate times."

Ignorance

A local flapper was overheard to say: "I can't get along with my boy friend lately. He ignores me, and if there's anything that makes me hopping mad it's ignorance."

CAUGHT IN THE WILD
By ROBERT AMES BENNET
Copyright by Robert Ames Bennet WNU Service

He smiled banteringly. "Well, I wouldn't say that. A handy cook isn't altogether a nuisance. The pot is beginning to simmer. You might drop in a pinch of tea. How's your ankle?"

"Ever so much better. I've exercised it a little every time I went outside. And I've half finished my parka. But how—" she interrupted herself—"how can you win if you don't kill them?"

"Why, for a starter, Miss Cook, we'll let them stew in their own juice for a few days. That will tend to soften their bonds of mutual aid. No bedding and a diet of saltless meat will help those three placer jacks to consider the desirability of that five thousand dollar reward I offered for their boss."

"Alan Garth, you're marvelous!"

"Not at all. It just happens I know this game, and I told you before that Huxby is only a commonplace wolf. If he were a wolverine, I'd have to look sharp. As it is, we'll stay up here snug and cosy, and enjoy their tea and sugar while you're learning to use your snowshoes."

By noon the next day Lilith's Eskimo suit was finished. Her ankle, though weak, was no longer sore or swollen. Garth bandaged it firmly with a strip of skin, and had her begin practicing on her webs.

Not being hurried or excited, she soon caught the knack of the snowshoe stride. As her ankle became stronger and her feet hardened she developed into a fairly fast snowshoe runner.

Their last climb took them up around the bend in the great cleft. Before they turned back, Garth had the girl fire the pistol. She neither shut her aiming eye nor flinched as she pulled the trigger. Each time the bullet struck within a foot of the nearby mark that Garth set up.

"Not half bad," he approved. "I'll let you go down with me tomorrow morning."

Though the temperature had become milder, it remained below freezing point. As on the other occasion, Garth started downgulch two hours before dawn. This time Lilith trailed with him.

Huxby had moved his camp to the lake shore opposite the stranded cabin plane. The engineer and two of his miners lay asleep, huddled in nests of spruce sprays and dry moss.

The fourth man sat on a log beside the fire, his rifle between his knees. He yawned drowsily.

The first slight tinge of dawn had begun to gray the east. But among the trees the night was still black. A sudden flicker of light in the darkness behind the leanto brought the sleepy watcher's head up with a jerk. Beside the skin-clad man with the lighted match, he saw a second man squinting at him along the barrel of a pistol.

Garth put his fingers to his lips for silence, and held a fuse-wrapped stick of dynamite close to his match. The miner let go of his rifle and straightened upon his feet, his hands high above his head.

The match flickered out. Garth dropped the dynamite and darted forward. He was none too quick. The slight thud of the fallen rifle had wakened Huxby. As Garth paused behind the corner of the leanto, the engineer peered out, with his pistol thrust forward.

As Garth jumped he struck with the butt of his belt-ax. It cracked down on Huxby's wrist. The engineer's pistol dropped. With a curse, Huxby grasped at the weapon, but Garth was quicker. As he caught it up, Huxby clutched at his throat. Garth felled him with a tap of the ax butt on the temple.

Wakened by the sudden hurry, the two miners in the leanto were grasping at the pair of rifles on which Huxby had lain. Garth whirled the pistol to cover them.

"Hands up, and get out beside your mate," he ordered. "We want only the murderer. But we'll shoot you down like dogs if you interfere."

One of the pair jerked up his hands. The other man hesitated. The miner outside called warningly: "The jig's up, Laney. The other feller has got the drop on us too."

Laney lifted his hands and stared out after his bed-mate. Huxby was staggering up, still dazed from the blow that had felled him. Wild with desperate rage, he struck out furiously. Garth side-stepped and thrust in a tripping foot.

The engineer pitched face-down on the hard-crusted snow. Before he could spring up again, Garth jumped upon his back. The blow knocked him breathless. It was then an easy matter to click Constable Dillon's handcuffs on the wrists of the murderer.

"Stop that cursing, or I'll gag you," Garth said. "There's a lady present. All right, Miss Ramill. Join us."

Huxby fell silent, to gape like the miners at the skin-clad form that came forward out of the black shadows into the firelight.

The girl still carried the constable's pistol raised ready to shoot. Huxby saw enough of her face in its border of wolverine fur to make certain Garth had not been bantering him.

"Lilith! You?"

"Yes, it's me, you cowardly sneak killer! I came after you with Alan, and he has let me catch you."

The murderer twisted around with his back to her and the fire. His head sagged forward. With a sudden return of alertness, Lilith turned her gaze away from his shadowy profile to watch the three lined-up miners.

Garth did not smile at the girl's needless caution. She had earned the right to think herself an invaluable helper. He allowed her to stand guard while he gathered up the three rifles and unloaded them.

"Right-o, Miss Ramill," Garth said. "Sit down. It's all over now but the talking."

She lowered the pistol but drew back where she could watch Huxby as well as the miners. Garth looked soberly at the men.

"If you know Kipling, you'll bear in mind that the female of the species is more deadly than the male. I dare say, though, you can safely venture to lower your hands and sit down with us."

At the welcome permission, the three dropped their arms. Two of them at once squatted on a log. Laney lingered for a surly question, before following suit:

"What's the play?"

"All we came for was to arrest Huxby. Help with the cabin plane, and there will be no mention of any shooting other than his murder of the constable. What wages did he promise you?"

"Double the usual. Tole us he had to get in his assessment work before the freeze-up."

"The claim belongs to me," Garth replied. "I will pay you the double wages."

"Ugh," growled Laney. "You outplayed the d—n fourflusher. It's a deal. You're boss. We're working for you."

Garth walked back into the blackness of the spruce trees. He returned with the floursack packbag, his own and Lilith's buckskin suits, and a hindquarter of fat caribou meat. At his invitation, the men eagerly went at the frozen meat with an ax, and put the big teapot, full of snow, on the fire.

Lilith and Garth had eaten before coming down from the igloo. They sat back, on a snowdrift, and watched while the others devoured the tender broiled meat and gulped down cups of hot tea. The flesh of the old she-bear had been as tough as leather and her fat very rank.

Huxby continued to sit in morose silence, with his back to the fire. The feasters paid no heed to him. After a time Lilith began to stir uneasily. At last she had to act. She handed her pistol to Garth and went to put a piece of meat on a spit. When it was broiled, she took it and a cup of tea to Huxby.

He stared up at her as if dumfounded, then shook his head sullenly. She put down the cup and plate beside him, and returned to Garth. At his look of cool inquiry, her eyes flashed with defiance.

"I don't care! It's not right to starve anyone."

He replied in a noncommittal tone; "You're a woman."

The murderer took up his cup of hot tea in his manacled hands and drank. He began to eat the meat.

When daylight came, Garth ordered everyone out to the cabin plane. The hard-frozen slush ice gave solid footing over the bog. It also gave a solid foundation out at the plane upon which were based the engineer's lifting operations. The ice had been chopped from around the floats, and a crib built under the inner end of each wing. By hoisting first on the outer end of one wing and then the other, the cribs had been heightened until the floats were level with the top of the ice.

A glance inside the cabin showed Garth the body of Constable Dillon lying where he had left it. Laney explained, with a jerk of a mittened thumb to Huxby:

"He first says we'd chuck the stiff under the ice. Then he says, no, to wait an' heave it out when we was flying over the muskegs."

"We'll wait still longer," Garth said. "That brave constable is going to receive an honorable burial. Now get to work with those sapling levers. Another pair of logs on the cribs will raise the floats high enough to roller her clear."

As the three miners took up the heavy pry poles, he went farther out on the lake and chopped a hole through the ice with his belt-ax. Though not as thick as he had hoped, it satisfied him when he noted the long streak of glare ice parallel with the shore.

He went back to help the men heave and pry until the bottoms of the pontoons were well above the ice level. Straight, smooth lengths of birch trunks were placed across the floats. The airplane was let down on the round logs. Pushing then rolled the plane from above the holes, out upon the unbroken ice.

Lilith had stood off a little to one side, watching the work with wondering admiration.

Garth showed the men how to skew the rollers for turning the plane. He went to shove sideways on the tail. The plane started to curve around.

A shriek from Lilith whirled Garth face about. Huxby was rushing at him, with an ax lifted high in his manacled hands. Lilith flew at the attacker as if frenzied. She sought to block his charge. He gave her his shoulder with the skill of a football player. It caught her on the chin and sent her spinning.

But the slight check allowed Garth time for a leap in under the ax before the blade could whirl down on his head. His left fist appeared to punch deep into the pit of Huxby's stomach. His right drove up under the chin of the gasping murderer. The uppercut lifted the killer off his feet and dropped him on his face, clean knocked out.

With no more than a glance at his fallen attacker, Garth sprang to help Lilith's dazed effort to sit up. "Well played," he said. "Not hurt, are you?"

"No-no—I—you—he didn't!" she cried, and burst into tears.

Garth gave her a pat on the head, and turned away, embarrassed. "No wonder you're overcome. It's been too much for a girl. We'll hop out of here at once."

He lashed the unconscious killer's wrists to his belt, tied his ankles together, and climbed into the cockpit of the plane. After replacing the breaker points, he had the men take turns spinning the propeller. He then tried the self-starter. The engine roared. Pulled by the whirling propeller, the plane slid forward off the log rollers.

After cutting the gun, Garth ordered two of the men to heave Huxby into the cabin. The third man he sent for the rifles. "I want the one with which he shot Constable Dillon. But you may as well bring the others—also a lot of that bear fat."

He himself went to pick up the still-weeping girl and help her to the second seat in the cockpit. He made sure of the supply of gasoline, and climbed down again to see that the men gave the bottom of the floats a thorough greasing with the bear fat.

After that, when all were aboard, and the rifles in Lilith's keeping, he started the engine. The plane at first moved slowly. The floats dragged on the rough surface of the frozen slush. But when they glided out on the streak of glare ice, the friction became less than that of a water take-off.

Within a half mile the speed had so increased that an easy pull on the joystick sent the plane skimming up off the glassy surface. Garth banked in a long curve to the left, listening to the roar of the warmed motor. Every cylinder was hitting sweet.

CHAPTER XII

Squaw Lilith.

THE cross-country flight brought the plane to the Mackenzie at the great bend below the Liard. But Garth did not come down at Fort Simpson. He flew on up the vast river to Great Slave lake, and east across the lake to Fort Resolution.

Some time before sunset, he set the cabin plane down at the landing of the Airways base by the mouth of the Slave river. After handing Lilith ashore, he left her standing while he went to speak to the Airways superintendent. That courteous gentleman hastened to tell the girl that his wife would be delighted if the daughter of Mr. Burton Ramill would honor their hospitality.

Garth was not invited. He turned away to meet the red-coated sergeant of police for whom he had sent. Lilith did not see him again until the next morning.

Told by her hostess that Mr. Garth wished to speak with her, she made a hurried effort to adjust her borrowed dress. She went hesitatingly into the room where Garth waited alone for her. Her dress, though more stylish than the one loaned to her on the steamer by the Fort Norman missionary's wife, was not cut for her lithe figure.

Sight of him in his caribou parka brought her to a startled halt. Her eyes widened. "Oh, still in your skin suit! You—you're going back!"

"What difference does it make to you?" he asked. "You'll soon be in Edmonton—and civilization."

She stepped suddenly close to him, her hands held out in appeal. "No! I—Alan, take me back with you!"

"Back there? Don't tell me you like that squaw life. Those days in the valley and the trip out must have been a h—l of torment to you—dirt, rags, mosquito dope, flies, starvation. And now ice, snow, bitter cold."

"Anything—anything just to be with you, Alan—dear!"

He put his arms about her. He kissed her red lips and scarlet cheeks and tightly closed eyelids.

He Kissed Her Red Lips and Scarlet Cheeks and Tightly Closed Eyelids.

"My girl," he said, "you are going with me wherever I go. Get on your parka."

Her arms were clasped tight about his neck. She lingered a moment to return his kiss. Then, her blue eyes aglow, she ran to obey him.

When she came hastening back, in her Eskimo costume, she ventured an appeal: "Can't I have a comb and brush and—and soap, Alan?"

He looked soberly past her shoulder at the amused face of her hostess. "Well, yes, I dare say you can. We're going first to Edmonton. Your father is there. I sent him a message that we were coming."

He took her into his arms, regardless of the onlooking lady. "My girl, we are back in civilization. We are first going to be properly married."

"But these caribou suits?"

"Best of flying costumes. We're taking a two-seater. The suits will come in handy again this winter when I teach Mrs. Garth how to drive a dog team. Until that it's to be silks for my girl. I must first testify at the trial. After that we'll hop over to Victoria and take a steamer to Japan for our honeymoon."

"Oh, Alan, how—how delightful! But Japan? Why, I never dreamt a prospector like you would care to travel in the Orient. So, if—if you'd rather go back to the valley, dear—"

Her hostess could no longer keep silent.

"Prospector, Miss Ramill! Is that all you know about Mr. Garth? His father is one of the heads of the Hudson's Bay company. He himself is a member of our parliament, a fellow of the Royal Geographical society, a noted explorer—"

"And the winner of the gamest girl I ever knew," Garth cut in. "Come on, Squaw Lilith. You've proved yourself a mate woman. Now you're going to be my lady wife."

LONG PRAIRIE CO-OP FILLING ORDER FOR FIVE MILLION EGGS

Long Prairie,—Cooperation is marching steadily onward this week in the plant of the Long Prairie Produce association.

This co-op, one of the outstanding ones in Minnesota, has just started an order for half a million pounds of eggs for an eastern concern. This will require some 14,000 cases, or approximately 5,000,000 eggs for the minimum order. However, it is possible the total consignment will reach 750,000 pounds.

A complete staff now is on the job, working under the most efficient and sanitary conditions, preparing the eggs for shipment. They are first tested and inspected in the shell then broken and tested again to insure freshness. The eggs then are thoroughly mixed, placed in large sterilized cans and frozen solid. Ten persons are employed in the breaking department.

The eggs are used by bakeries, hotels, restaurants, and candy and ice cream manufacturers.

BIG BUSINESS ARMS!

According to "evidence now before a group of U. S. Senators, major American industries recently made large secret purchases of tear gas, guns and ammunition in anticipation of labor troubles." This information was obtained from the files of Federal Laboratories, Inc., of Pittsburgh, who, together with Lake Erie Chemical Co of Cleveland, sell 90 percent of the tear gas used. They serve 17 governments, city and state police, militia, strikebreaking, agencies and industrial corporations.

Federal Laboratories provided San Francisco with $30,000 worth of gas during the general strike. The Toledo Auto Lite Co. bought $8,000 worth while a $100,000 sale of ammunition went to the steel companies of Pittsburgh and Youngstown, Ohio. Some of the other big companies which provided themselves with ammunition against strikers were: The Weirton Steel Co., the Cudahy Packing Co., and the H. C. Frick Coke Co., of Pittsburgh which spent $3,391 for riot guns, shells, and grenades.

PTA Meet

Superintendent Morris Bye spoke briefly on National Music Week, and outlined the programs being presented by the various public schools in connection with it.

C. W. Pope, head of the industrial training department, gave an interesting and enlightening address on the subject, "Why Industrial Arts" He traced the history and development of industrial training up to the present time, and explained the purpose of instruction in the industrial arts.

The program was concluded with a bond burning ceremony, at which B. O. Norby, president of the board of education, presided. Mr. Norby introduced past-president of the board, E. M. Bennes, who described the various bonds which had been retired since 1919, and disclosed the present status of the district. Mr. Bennes' report revealed that the bonds retired since 1919 total approximately $250,000 including principal and interest. The bonded indebtedness of the school district at the present time amounts to $118,000, which is divided as follows: Northrop building, $33,000; Knox building, $63,000; and funding debt, $22,000. Mr. Bennes report showed. Following Mr. Bennes' talk, the first bond to be retired was burned, and the remaining retired bonds were turned over to the janitors to be disposed of.

After the program, the home economics and industrial arts departments held open house in their respective quarters in the building, where exhibits of representative class projects were arranged for the inspection of visitors Lunch was served in the board of education rooms.

floor brought the last five to the Speaker's desk at one time, and before any effort could be made to remove names the thing was done.

Not all who signed the petition will vote for the bill. Some of them signed for partisan reasons, thinking the vote will prove embarrassing to the administration. Others merely felt that, despite their disapproval of the principles embodied in the bill, a measure with such wide-spread interest centered upon it certainly deserved at least an out-and-out test vote and a debate of its merits or faults on the floor under the House rules. So the fact that at one time or another more than 245 House Members have signed the petition does not insure its passage.

On the other hand, there is a respectable number, says Lemke, by actual poll who were averse to signing the petition but who can be counted on for a YEA vote when that stage is reached. He confidently predicts passage by a sizable majority, while the majority whip says his poll of the membership shows that certain defeat awaits it. Should the House pass it, a Senate vote in the present session is virtually certain, and would see the measure that far on its legislative pathway for the first time in its stormy history.

with some of them scattered into Marshall county, Mr. Taylor stated. If it should prove that there are not enough tracts of suitable land available in the area so far listed, the project will be spread out into Red Lake county and towards western Marshall county. An effort is being made to keep the parcels to be acquired as close together as possible in order to facilitate supervision after the projects are under way.

Resettlement clients from the Mud Lake restoration area and the Beltrami Island project will have first choice of these farms, Mr. Taylor stated, after which other farmers who may be renters or dispossessed owners will be considered. Clients will be allowed to look the farm over and make their choice after which they may rent the farm on a three year probation period during which time they may decide if they wish to keep the place and during which time the government may also decide whether or not they are desirable and worthy clients.

Buildings will be erected under the WPA with labor and part of the materials costs carried by the government. The local sponsor share will be charged against the farm. The cost of setting up the farm complete with buildings will not necessarily be the price at which the farm is to be sold to the client, however. The price will be based on the potential production of the farm over a ten year period and ten year price average. The price to the client will be based upon the capacity of the farm as a producer over such a period and may be far less than the cost of the establishment of the farm.

Garnes Trims Gully In Season Opener

Garnes trimmed Gully 11 to 4 in the first game of the season on the Garnes diamond on Sunday, May 3rd, in a well-contested battle considering the early season soft pitching arms. Each club contributed four errors. Pug Lund on the mound for the Garnes aggregation, the first three and a half innings, struck out 8 Gully batsmen and allowed five hits. He was relieved by D. Hervey who worked the rest of the game allowing two hits and taking six strikeouts. Bob Hervey was on the receiving end for Garnes.

Perry started for Gully but was driven from the box in the first inning and was succeeded by Malvig. Eleven hits were garnered off the Gully offerings. Nyland was behind the bat for Gully.

A return game is scheduled at Gully as part of the May 17th celebration to be held there

Milo Reno, Militant Farm Leader Dies

Milo Reno, 70, militant farm leader, and president of the National Farmers Holiday association died at Excelsior Springs, Mo., on Tuesday following a heart attack culminating a long illness from which he went to Excelsior Springs to recuperate.

The advocate of direct action, he left the ministry to fight for the farmers against the farm policies of several national administrations He organized the holiday association in 1932 and carried on a "farm revolt" which gained national prominence because of the "Sears Roebuck sales" which his organization conducted when farmers were being foreclosed on. In 1933 his followers picketed highways and blocked sales of produce, halted foreclosures and dragged a recalcitrant Iowa judge from his bench.

In 1934 he urged mid-west farmers to "put guns to your shoulders and use force" to back up the agricultural demands for which he had battled.

NEW SERIAL YARN BY CHANNING POLLOCK

"Synthetic Gentleman" Reveals Author's Deep Insight.

Channing Pollock has written such dramatic masterpieces as "The Fool," "The Enemy" and "The House Beautiful." He wrote the lyric for "My Man," immortalized by Fanny Brice. But—

"My only real talent," he has declared, "is for friendship. I know more bishops and burglars, chorus girls and capitalists, bootblacks and barons, than any other one man in the universe."

And right there you have the explanation of the remarkable insight into both the upper and lower crusts of life that makes his new adventure novel, "Synthetic Gentleman," some of the grandest reading of this or any other year. It is the story of a second-story worker who broke into another man's house, stepped into another man's shoes (while his own were drying by the fireplace) and found that in order to keep the girl he loved he had to go right on wearing the disguise of a gentleman.

CHANNING POLLOCK

Playwright, novelist, short story writer, essayist, poet, lecturer and lyricist of distinction, Channing Pollock, born in 1880 in Washington, D. C., has become one of the outstanding literary figures of the present day. It is with pride that this newspaper announces that his "Synthetic Gentleman" will appear in these columns in serial form. This bright, exciting story is guaranteed to keep anyone who begins it hanging on breathlessly to the very last chapter.

BIRDS START FIRE

Lewiston—Firemen answered a call at Lewiston the other day as a result of what was believed to be the nesting propensities of birds. Either that, or the sparrows at Lewiston are taking up one of the vices of men. It is believed the fire was started by a lighted cigarette or cigar carried into the awning by a sparrow. Several buckets of water extinguished the blaze about the time the fire laddies had arrived.

Mrs. Wittich Replies to Chicago Tribune Slander of Minnesota

By A. L. Harris

Mrs. Jean W. Wittich, state budget commissioner and director of personnel from March, 1931 to May 1933, has written a long letter to the Chicago Tribune in reply to the latest of a series of sensational articles on Minnesota......

"The Chicago Tribune's incredible serial on Minneapolis and Minnesota in the form of several articles with sensational headlines reached the height of its false and distorted information on April 2, when Mr. Wayne Thomis, your muck-raking reporter, devoted another page to a tissue of falsehoods entitled 'Bleeding Minnesota'," writes Mrs. Wittich......

The letter analyzes and answers in detail the charge made by the Tribune article that Governor Olson's administration was a "free-spending one"......

"There is a budget preview in Minnesota," continues Mrs. Wittich, "That means that all departments operating under the Commission of Administration and Finance submit budget requests for expenditures six months in advance of actual spending, subject to approval or reduction by the budget commissioner......

"When Governor Olson assumed office in January, 1931, this preview had been made, and departments were operating under money that had been appropriated by the previous legislature and released prior to that date, and they continued to do so until the end of the fiscal year, six months later, June 30, 1931. The budget commissioner who had released the money under the previous administration continued to administer it for three and a half months, until March 1, 1931, when I succeeded him.....

"During the fiscal year, 1931, for which, as I have said before, the money had already been released by the administration preceeding this one, there was disbursed from the revenue fund, which finances departments operating on appropriations, more than $1,414,000 more than had been spent in the preceeding fiscal year, 1930......

"During the first entire fiscal year of the Olson administration, 1932, disbursements from the revenue fund were only $239,215 greater than they had been in 1931; and that, too, in the face of an extensive building program for state institutions......

"During the second full fiscal year of the Olson administration, more than $1,320,000 less was disbursed from this fund than in the preceeding one, 1932 "......

"Your analyses of increases in tax returns are not wholly correct either," the letter continues, "since you do not mention the reduction in levies on homesteads up to $4,000 - nor concede that a one-mill levy which was capable of producing about $2,000,000 in 1930 cannot bring in more than $1,250,000 now."

COUNCIL HOLDS BUSY SESSION TUES. EVENING

Over $20,000 in Residence Construction Is Given Approval

18 CITY BLOCKS OF STREETS TO BE OILED

An Additional Centrifuge Is Purchased for the Power Plant

The city council waded thru an imposing pile of work at its meeting on Tuesday evening, winding up the session after 12 Midnight, when they adjourned to meet again on Friday evening to take up matters which were not reached Tuesday evening. A committee for the Civic and Commerce association will meet with them at that time to discuss electric light and power rates.

Among the major things achieved Tuesday night was the approval of over $20,000 in new, repair and remodel residence construction, the naming of the judges of election for the ensuing year, calling for bids on about 20 city blocks of street oiling, buying an additional centrifuge for the power plant and authorizing some sewer construction.

A committee was appointed to investigate, with the city attorney, the two remaining flowage rights claims against the city, namely: Joe Holmes and Nels Myrin. Mr. Holmes states that the water is backing into his chickencoop and that he may be forced to raise ducks instead of chickens The mayor requested that the council authorize the chief of police to attend the police school to be held at the University of Minnesota on the 18 to 21 under the auspices of the Minnesota League of Municipalities. Heavy Fish Decline Noted Last Winter

Requests received by the Department of Conservation for assistance in the burying of suffocated fish indicate that the loss of fish during the past winter was greater than perhaps ever before.

The situation is particularly serious in the shallow lakes in the prairie sections of the state, according to E. V. Willard, commissioner of conservation.

"We have been apprehensive of the effects of the thick ice which formed over the shallow lakes throughout the state", Mr. E. V. Willard, said, "but have been hoping that conditions would not be serious. Reports however indicate that the situation is serious in many of our lakes; Reports from Lake Okamanpeeden in Martin County, Lake Shetek in Murray County, Big Kandiyohi and from Mud Lake in the Lake Minnetonka area indicate that the casualties are extremely heavy. Now that the ice is clearing off the lakes the wind drives the dead fish up against the shore in long wind rows."

"Dead fish, as long as they are in open water, will remain floating for a short time, only, after which they will sink and become inofensive. Only those which actually are driven up on shore or become anchored in such a way that they cannot sink, produce the stench and become objectionable. For this reason, waiting for two or three days before beginning to rake in and bury the fish, usually results in most of them sinking to the bottom and disappearing.

"Those which remain on shore however cannot be disposed of except by burying or having them hauled away as fertilizer. The value of fish as a fertilizer is not generally understood by the farmers who reside in the vicinity of the lakes where these conditions occur If they are gathered and hauled away before decay sets in they can be made a soil fertilizer of high value.

"Have all of the fish in any of our lakes been killed because of last winter's conditions? This question cannot be answered at this time. It is certain that the fish in many of our lakes have suffered a terrific drain."

Buffalo, N. Y.—(YNS)—Business men, not educators, control higher education in the United States.

That is the opinion of Prof. Earl Mcgrath of the University of Buffalo's department of education, who has just completed a two-year study of the membership of boards of trustees and other devices used to guide the channels of college policies. From two thirds to three quarters of the men who dominated the boards are big business men and powerful financiers, he said.

While 40 percent of college trustees were clergymen in 1860 he reported, in 1930 they numbered only 7 percent of the total. Business men, bankers, and lawyers totaled 74 percent while educators made up only 10 percent of the numbers.

Files for Supreme Court Justice

Joseph A. Poirier

Mr. Joseph A. Poirier filed Monday for Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of Minnesota. His statement follows:

"I believe the people of Minnesota, particularly attorneys are not satisfied with judge-made law; they believe that mistakes made by legislature should be corrected by the legislature itself, and that the courts should not concern themselves with the motives of legislative bodies, as in our recent six to one decision in which the Minnesota Supreme Court invalidated the Corporate Excess Tax law upon the ground that the Legislature repealed the act by implication.

"If the Legislature had intended to repeal this law and relieve corporations from payment of millions of dollars in taxation, I believe they would have had the intelligence to do so. The Legislature did nothing about repealing the Corporate Excess Profits Tax, and the Supreme Court usurped the prerogative of the Legislature as it has done many times in the past.

"Our Supreme Court now gives sanction to the doctrine that they came into being possessed of inherent power, wholly independent of the legislative or executive arms of the sovereign state. I believe, said Mr. Poirier, that the Supreme Court needs. humanizing, and should be closer to the people who created it."

Mr. Joseph A Poirier is 48 years of age, born on a farm near Appleton, Minnesota, studied in the Public Schools of Appleton and Minneapolis, attended the University of Minnesota and Northwestern College of Law, graduated as an Attorney and was admitted to the Bar in 1916. He is married and lives at 800 4th St. N. E., Minneapolis.

Mr. Poirier has had a long public career. During the War, he was a member of the Legal Advisory Board, a member of the Railroad Adjustment Board in charge of Railroad Employees adjustments, and was General Chairman of Northern Pacific Telegraphers.

He was appointed assistant County Attorney in Hennepin County in 1924 by Governor Floyd B. Olson. After serving 10 years as Assistant County Attorney, he was appointed member of the Rural Credit Bureau as Assistant Attorney General. Upon the re-organization of the Rural Credit Bureau, he served as Chief Counsel for the Conservator, and later was transferred to the Highway Department as Assistant Attorney General in charge of Personnel. He is a member of many fraternities, including 25 years continuous membership in the Order of Railroad Telegraphers.

NEW YORK GOVERNOR ASKS CHILD LABOR AMENDMENT

Albany, N. Y.—(YNS)— Governor Lehman of New York in a special message to the State Legislature called for the ratification of the Child Labor Amendment to the Constitution.

Governor Lehman said "Within the past few months it has been disclosed that children are again returning to the factories. The availability of this supply of child labor inevitably reduced the rate of wages paid to fathers and mothers. In many instances children have completely displaced adult workers who were paid considerably more. Public and private moneys frequently must be used to supplement the pitifully low wages granted these child breadwinners. As a result some employers of children are being subsidized by money raised through taxation," the governor argued

Whether this appeal of New York's Governor will sway the legislature is questionable. A strong group within the legislature has consistently blocked ratification.

Religious Freedom is Denied School Children

(By Youth News Service)

Northampton, Mass.—(YNS)—Their religion forbids them to salute the flag. Their school principal orders them to make the pledge of allegiance.

So, for following their religious teachings, the three children of Ignace Opielouski of Belchertown, seem headed for terms in the state reformatory. A Northamptown judge ordered the family broken up after hearing the complaints of school teachers and superintendents against the children, who belong to the religious Jehovah's Witnesses' sect. Ball was set at $800 pending appeal of their case to the Bay State's superior court, while the father was fined $20.

"It's too harsh", Mr. Opielouski declared. "I thought under the constitution an individual was allowed full religious freedom. I am a better patriot than many who are citizens".

Agreeing with the aged Pole are liberals from Northampton, labor leaders and professors at nearby Amherst and Smith Colleges who have formed a defense committee to protect the family's constitutional right to freedom of religion. A group of Amherst students are tutoring the children in their school work during the time they remain away from their classes.

Idaho Co-eds Take Red Out of Flag

Boise, Idaho—(YNS)—The Veterans of Future Wars started something with their burlesque of veterans organizations and war talk. Now the co-eds at the University of Idaho have organized the Daughters of No More American Revolutions.

Their expressed purpose is "to reinterpret American history and tradition in order to purge it of any taint of Communism". As an example they offer the common error of considering Washington and Jefferson as revolutionist. "We know they were nothing of the sort", they maintain. "Washington and Jefferson fought against the forces of British radicalism. If they were not able to maintain their conservatism peaceably they were willing to go to war for it".

At an enthusisatic meeting they voted to remove the red stripes from the American flag. "Red in the star-spangled banner", they insist, "connotes radicalism and anarchy". They passed resolutions to paint all the red barns in Idaho green, and to send the "Red Indians" back to where they came from.

The University of Idaho is situated in a small lowland town—named Moscow!

ISSUES STATEMENT

Harry H. Peterson

The following statement to the voters was issued by Attorney General Harry H. Peterson when he filed as a candidate for re-election last Wednesday. Mr Peterson is serving his second term and has the farmer-labor endorsement for re-election.

I shall endeavor in the future, as in the past, to make the office of Attorney General a true representative and champion of all the people of the State without respect to corporate power and special privilege, which may oppose me. Matters of outstanding importance now pending under my charge are the chain store tax case, the telephone rate appeal cases and the institution of proceedings for other telephone rate reductions. I trust that my past record in drafting and successfully defending the Minnesota Mortgage Moratorium Law, the Homestead Preferential Tax Law and the $5,000,000.00 Relief Law, in defending the constitutionality of the Income Tax Law, and in prosecuting the telephone rate cases before the Railroad and Warehouse Commission, which resulted in large rate reductions, will meet with the approval of the voters of the State.

CAPITOL NEWS REVIEW

By A. I. Harris

An investigation by the Senate into the proposed dismemberment of the Minneapolis & St. Louis railroad may be productive of some very sensational revelations . . .

Minnesota's junior Senator Elmer A. Benson, who demanded the investigation, wants to question Frederick H. Prince, Boston capitalist, said to be the "brains" of a group of eastern financiers behind the dismemberment plan. This group has heavy investments in railroad securities. . . .

The plan seems to have been nipped in the bud. It appears that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was to go through with it even to the extent of loaning the seven railroads involved in the scheme funds to carry out certain improvements on their roads This is in violation of the spirit of the RFC act, which was intended to promote employment rather than be party to manuevers which will throw thousands of persons out of work . . .

Dismemberment of the Minneapolis and St. Louis railroad would present grave economic problems for Minnesota and the Northwest. Immediate effect would be the loss of jobs to 3,000 people. In addition J. H. Cleland, Minneapolis Tribune writer points out, "70 cities and towns with total population of nearly 100,000 would lose their direct rail service to and from Minneapolis; 200,000 people on farms in adjacent areas would be affected, and Minneapolis wholesale houses and grain marketing interests would be deprived of a big part of the trade developed in the past 60 years." . . .

It seems strange that the RFC should have lent a sympathetic ear to the bloated eastern capitalists, overlooking the social and economic needs of Minnesota and the Northwest. The RFC now finds itself in a rather embarrassing situation . . .

Senator Benson has done a valuable and lasting service to Minnesota by making his effective fight for a Senate investigation.

Minnesota has a perennial gubernatorial candidate. He is a certain A. B. Gilbert, of Mound. He has again filed as a candidate on the Republican ticket. . .

Gilbert does not file with any hopes of receiving the nomination. He is too smart for that. But he comes in as a handy man for the Republican party to throw mud at Farmer Labor candidates. The Republican party thus throws the mud and does not assume the responsibility for it. .

Who is this Mr. Gilbert? He is a renegade liberal who left the movement, perhaps to go to greener pastures. Every movement like the Farmer Labor party has its Judas, and Gilbert is playing that role in Minnesota. . .

When the military raided the Citizens Alliance Office in Minneapolis during the truck drivers' strike, they seized a rather interesting memorandum, written in longhand. It pertained to Mr. A. B. Gilbert of Mound . . and it told about this Mr. Gilbert coming to the Alliance office to get money. Undoubtedly this little memorandum will be of value when the history of the Minnesota Farmer Labor party is written.

The Patman-Robinson bill, now before Congress, is the last line of defense for the independent merchant against unfair chain store competition . . .

Over a nationwide radio hookup, Senator Benson recently flayed conservative opposition to this measure. . .

The plight of the independent merchant due to chain store competition, is daily becoming more precarious. The Farmer Labor party in Minnesota recognized this some years ago, and was instrumental in passing a chain store tax bill . . . .

It should be quite obvious to independent merchants that their economic fortunes lie with the liberal political movements, which seek to curb the power of concentrated wealth as exemplified by chain stores, and aim to bring about prosperity for the masses rather than for the millionaires. . . .

Just how an independent merchant can consistently support the political party of Wall Street is a question for the sages to answer. It is just one of those illogical things which human beings do and nobody can explain why. The history of American business and industry of the past 25 years shows clearly that the conservative political movement aids those forces which seek the annihilation of independent business.

Slick salesmen of dubious securities are finding Minnesota a tough playground, due to the alertness of our Securities Commission. Within the past two weeks two salesmen were convicted in the district court of Hennepin County and sentenced to a year's confinement and a third indicted for a fraud upon disabled war veterans. Upon the return of better times, unscrupulous salesmen become more daring and prompt information concerning their activities should be given the Securities Department. In case of doubt, investigate first.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL LAWYERS THROW ANOTHER FIT

Minnesota political atmosphere is taking on the murky color of the North Dakota variety where they had three or more governors within a year without benefit of a burial plat.

And evidently it all came about thru the very pronounced political perspicuity of our sagacious republican friends who discerned that there are two senatorial terms to fill at the election this fall. One for the unexpired term of Thos. D. Schall, expiring January first, and the other the regular six year term beginning when the new congress convenes on January third.

Always precocious, our republican friends have filed Guy V. Howard for the unexpired term and Theo. Christianson for the six year term, and believe it or not, they would have us believe that there is a possibility that the other candidates didn't legally file at all, since they failed to specify in their affidavit, the term to which they aspired. All of which has started the constitutional lawyers sweating like a fat man in a Finn bath. The Minneapolis Journal says that according to Governor Olson's own language when he appointed Elmer Benson to carry the senatorial toga he stated it was for a term "until the vacancy is filled by election, as provided by law" and according to the law the appointment must be for a term ending "when a successor is duly elected and qualified."

And so the constitutional experts of the Fourth Estate, tells us that Howard being unopposed in the election will automatically draw the senate salary and be the senator following the general election in November and until the term expires in January, in spite of the fact that the senate will not be in session during that time. Which all may be so-maybe.

Without in any way presuming to challenge the decisions of these Herculean interpreters of the constitution, we point out that taking the oath of office is a part of the qualifications and no person assumes an office nor its emoluments until he has taken that oath. According to Chapter 2, Sec. 21 Code of the U. S. "The oath of office shall be administered by the president of the Senate to each senator who shall be elected, previous to his taking his seat." Inasmuch as the Senate will not convene until after Mr. Howard's term expires it is somewhat difficult to understand how he will qualify and become senator, even for a day. That will be another hurdle for the republican defenders and interpreters of the constitution to overcome.

IT WOULD BE AMUSING IF IT WASN'T TRAGIC

LaFollette's paper "The Progressive", printed the following letter from a young man who is enlisted in a CCC camp last week:

> "Last Friday the forest supervisor told me that the company commander here complained to him that I was taking a radical paper, even passing it around to others in camp to read, and that the paper was The Progressive. Of course, the camp educational adviser has been borrowing my Progressive for use in preparing for his classes in current events. . . As to whether the company commander is going to press the charges against me further remains to be seen. He has stated to several here in camp that "No man is worthy to be a citizen of this country until he has served in the army.
> "Probably you didn't know that you were putting out a paper too 'radical' for a CCC camp. I didn't know it and still don't believe it, his majesty the commander notwithstanding . . . I enjoy your paper hugely and wish it were read in every CCC camp and school in America."

The Progressive finds the incident amusing. However, we find it less amusing than tragic. It is a fact that the CCC camps are being used by the army and navy as far as they dare to carry it, as an induction camp for military service. Recruiting posters are tacked prominently and promiscuously in the camps and highly polished shavetails lose no opportunity to parade the "advantages" of army and navy life before the young and impressionable boys under their command. There are continual and large enlistments into the armed forces from most of the CCC camps as a perusal of the records will prove.

We have felt that the CCC is one of the few really beneficial things that the Roosevelt administration has inaugurated. But the pernicious influence of the army is decidedly unhealthful to the morals and future of the young men who enter this service. In our mind the CCC should be under the supervision of the forest service or the conservation department and not under the supervision of the army.

We believe that the American people want their young men to be surrounded with environment that create healthful recreation, useful labor and intelligent education. The army is an organized murder squad, and contrary to every Christian ethic. It should be kicked out of the CCC.

WHERE WILL THEY MOVE NEXT?

During the hectic days of 1933, it was reported that American capitalists, fearing a revolution were shipping gold in barrels to France and keeping their yachts steamed up in Atlantic seabord harbors ready to make a quick get-away. It was stated that the exportation of gold was stopped by governmental orders when Roosevelt took up the duties of the presidential office.

Recent dispatches from France where the parties have swept the elections report that French capitalists are exporting gold and standing in readiness to flee the country. Which would indicate that life is just one flea after another for the poor little rich men.

Always delightfully helpful, we suggest that arrangements should be made with some trans-atlantic airway authority or other to supply the capitalists of all countries with one of these floating contraptions having hotel and harbor facilities, where they may store their shining hoard and float away, far from the haunts of these wild-eyed radicals who think in the terms of human progress and equality, there to spend the rest of their days in peace and tranquility.

MAKING IT PERFECTLY CLEAR

Washington reports indicate that congress is wrestling heroically with the new tax bill, and are simplifying the measure to a large extent.

Samuel B. Hill, government tax expert, explaining the Bill to the House members stated that "the bill is as plain as the English language can make it."

"The measure made fundamental issues clear enough," says News-Week, "If a corporation with a net income of more than $10,000 paid out none of its earnings in taxable dividends, the government would take 42½ percent—the maximum tax—of its income; if it paid out all of the earnings, the Treasury takes nothing. For corporations with incomes under $10,000 the maximum tax would be 29½ percent."

However, when the framers tried to simplify the methods of arriving at intermediate tax rates they evidently had a brainstorm. This is the result according to News-Week

"If the dividend credit is a percentage of the adjusted net income which is less than 55 (and such percentage is not shown in the foregoing table) the tax shall be a percentage of the adjusted net income equal to the sum of 15, plus one half of the amount by which the dividend credit is of the adjusted net income."

All of which of course makes it as plain as the nose on your face—to a Brain-Truster.

PITY THE INCOME TAXPAYER

We have heard the old, old story that the country will surely go to the bow-wows if business and capital is not relieved of its tremendous tax burden so long and often that we had almost come to believe it.

Now comes a comparison of English and American tax ratios which leaves us dumbfounded. Dumfounded because England hasn't gone to the bow-wows at all, but is recovering from the depression faster than we are and with less pain apparently. Or, perhaps it is the British stoic, grin and bear it attitude that deceives us. At any rate here is the comparative income tax rate:

"A married New Yorker with no dependents, earning $3,000 a year, pays in federal and state income taxes $23 a year. A Londoner similarly situated pays the British government $246 a year." Which probably accounts for the fact that our capitalists are not moving to England, in spite of the oft repeated threats.

THE ECONOMY CRY

(Kanabec County Progressive)

The platform adopted by the Republicans at their convention held a short time ago may be used as an indicator to show what some political parties are being compelled to do if they expect to have any hope of electing a ticket. The voters demand a liberal and progressive platform. Ballyhoo that the "public office is a public trust" and the oldtime "point with pride and view with alarm" attitude have outlived their usefulness as a vote-getter. The adoption by the Republicans of a platform that admits that conditions are not perfect is a large concession on the part of reactionaries.

Just how many persons are going to fall for the idea that the G. O. P. has become a "liberal" movement remains to be seen; but if one recalls the "liberal" (?) achievements of a Republican controlled legislature with its committees packed with corporation lawyers, it is doubtful if a very great number will believe they mean business.

As usual, one of the keynotes of the convention was "economy" which reminds us of the man who called the town's only fire department away from a burning school to put out a bonfire he had in front of his house. The cry of economy sounds fine, but today it means absolutely nothing. There are many large and important problems confronting the government and nation today, but the economy issue is used merely because it gives them something to talk about. Is economy in government more important than the unemployment problem, our relief program, old-age and social insurance, and dealing with the ever-increasing youth problems of today? If it is, then most of us are wrong. To our minds, economy in the face of our economic condition would mean only one thing, and that is chaos.

It seems that those who carry water for the "elephant" didn't care to delve in social problems, probably because the only reasonable solutions are those which have been a part of the Farmer-Labor program for a long time, and even the old hard-shelled boys themselves would have a hard time explaining plagiarism.

CROOKED UTILITIES

(Union Advocate)

For the past two years a special committee, named by the New York state legislature, has been probing the affairs of public utility corporations and holding companies. Last year this committee rendered its report, and among its findings were the following:

Utility companies deliberately inflate their book valuations in order to "justify" exorbitant rates.

Holding companies are a distinct liability.

Public utility corporations regard any state regulation as a joke.

At least $225,000,000 of "water" had been added to the capital structure of utility corporations operating within the state of New York.

The cost of so-called "good will campaigns" comes out of the pockets of consumers.

All propaganda, all lobbying against utility regulation bills, all "contributions" and all other activities of the power trust are extracted from the consumers.

Municipal ownership is an excellent way to make private utilities behave.

And finally, utility corporations use trick bookkeeping to upbolster their demands for higher rates or to give vitality to the arguments against any lowering of the existing rates.

That's what the New York committee learned after two years of probing.

Norway's Day of Days

By Prof. Richard Beck

Written Especially for the Forum

The day is May 17, 1814; the place Eidsvoll, beautifully located near inviting Lake Mjosa, only a short distance north of Oslo. Within the substantial and dignified Eidsvoll building, which has since become a national shrine, an assembly of representatives from virtually every part of Norway has just completed a heroic and historic task. These chosen and trusted men have declared their country to be free and independent, have accordingly framed and adopted for it a liberal constitution, and have elected Prince Christian Frederick, their Governor-General, king of Norway.

The great work of the representatives is finished. In a meeting dealing with such momentous issues, at times, feeling naturally ran high and heated discussions ensued; but the differences of opinion have been submerged in the common interest, the immediate and future welfare of the Norwegian nation. "All had assembled", writes Nicolai Wergeland, himself a prominent representative, "for the sacred purpose of laying the foundation for the regeneration of their country Though they were not equal in knowledge, they were all equally upright in purposes, and equally worthy of respect." Recorded testimony of other trustworthy contemporary observers is to the same effect.

The representatives could therefore, at the close of the assembly on May 17, sincerely and joyously join hands and exclaim in chorus: "United and true until Dovre-mountain falls." They could return home conscious of the fact that they had laid the cornerstone of a re-born Norwegian nation, a new Norway, rich in accomplishments of mind and hand.

No wonder that to truly patriotic and liberty-loving Norwegians the 17th of May has become what the 4th of July is to similarly minded Americans, a day of great historic significance and hallowed memories, an occasion worthy of elaborate festivities and hallowed memories, an occasion worthy of elaborate festivities. One hundred and twenty two years have now passed since that eventful May day in 1814 when the Norwegians constitution was adopted which was at the some time a most forceful declaration of Norwegian self-government.

Beautiful flowers sometimes spring forth in the most unlikely places, where the environment seems entirely hostile to such growth. The observation applies particularly strikingly to the framing of the Norwegian constitution and the recovery of Norwegian independence. These developments, so beneficial to Norway, were the direct outgrowth of events which, if they had been allowed to run their course unhindered, would have left the Norwegian nation a dependent people, far removed from complete self-rule.

Norway's constitutional freedom grew out of the turbulence of the Napoleonic wars. By the Treaty of Kiel, January 14, 1814, the King of Denmark was compelled by Sweden and her allies to transfer Norway to the king of Sweden, without in the least consulting the Norwegian people or their official spokesmen. The news of this unworthy treatment fanned into flame the Norwegian national feeling which rapidly had been gathering strength during the previous decades. Vigorous resentment was voiced on all sides; justly, the Norwegians felt "that they had been bartered away in a manner disgraceful to a free people." Led by Prince Christian Frederick, all classes joined in refusing to submit to the Kiel-treaty, arguing that it was in no way binding for them since they had not been consulted.

At first Prince Christian Frederick intended to claim the Norwegian throne by hereditary right but wisely he yielded to the counsel of the Professor George Sverdrup and other Norwegian Leaders, whom he had gathered at Eidsvoll in February, 1814, and declared himself willing to accept the crown at the hand of the people and to rule in accordance with a constitution adopted by duly selected representatives of the people Having been elected regent temporarily, he further agreed to call at Eidsvoll a general assembly for the purpose of drawing up and adopting a constitution referred to. Popular government in Norway had won a great victory. Royal power long in the saddle, had been made to submit to the supreme will of the people.

As a result of that preliminary meeting, the Constitutional Assembly, made up of 112 representatives of the people, met at Eidsvoll April 10, 1814, and quickly succeeded, as has already been indicated, in framing and adopting a Norwegian constitution; and pursuant to its stipulation also elected a king of Norway, the choice naturally falling upon Prince Christian Frederick, who had taken a prominent part in the deliberations. A keynote of that assembly was the emphasis on the sovereignity of the will of the people, and that is also a fundamental characteristic of the Norwegian constitution there adopted. A remarkable document, although not without defects, it expressed sound democratic principles in clear and dignified language. The lawmaking power and the right to tax were vested in the people through their representatives. Freedom of the press and freedom of religious worship are guaranteed. Personal and hereditary privileges are done away with once and for all. Americans will be interested in knowing that the Norwegian constitution owed not a little to the democratic principles proclaimed by the fathers of the American Republic. To be sure, Norway was later in 1814 forced into union with Sweden; but thanks to the work done by the Eidsvoll assembly, Norway entered the union with recognition of the sovereignity of her people, in principle if not in practice.

Time has, moreover, proved that "the men of Eidsvoll" built well. During the vicissitudes of the nineteenth century the Norwegian people were to be sure called upon to guard their constitution, but in turn it has frequently proved to them a bulwark of strength. Upon the groundwork laid at Eidsvoll on May 17, hundred and twenty two years ago, has gradually risen the super-structure of the impressive industrial and cultural life of the present day Norway.

Paul Robeson and Russia

Paul Robeson, famous Negro baritone, has announced the intention of making his permanent home in the Soviet Union Robeson has attained stage, screen, and radio success with his remarkable singing, yet he does not feel at home here, because no matter how good he is, to the average person he is just a nigger.

Robeson, like others, has discovered that in the Soviet Union one is treated like a human being no matter what his race may be, if he has beneficial services to offer humanity.

Fifty May Days

On May 1, 1886 organized American workers staged a one-day strike, the object of which was to attain the eight-hour day. From this incident the American Federation of Labor was born.

Fifty years ago the eight-hour day was considered preposterous. Ten, twelve, fourteen, and sixteen-hour days were quite common; one industrial magnate voiced the opinion that industry would run into stagnation if shorter hours were applied. "Workers do little enough now," he said, "without giving them less time to do it in."

Henry Ward Beecher (whose memory is venerated in most history books as an educator and liberal thinker) said: "Labor unions are the worst form of despotism that ever were bred by the human mind." The particular form of despotism Beecher was blasting was the demand for shorter hours in industry.

In the fifty years since 1886 many things have happened. Industrial magnates have found that instead of slowing down production, the eight-hour day actually speeded it up, for workers didn't have as much chance to get fagged, and they could be worked at full tilt all the time.

So we find that on May Day, 1936, there was a quite unanimous demand for the six hour day and five day week, in all labor demonstrations. This demand seems as radical to industrialism as the eight-hour day demand must have seemed fifty years back. But the technocrats tell us that with present resources and machinery we could produce enough in three hours a day to supply the needs of everyone—and there's no telling what could be done if certain labor-saving devices were used which are now held off the market on account of the depression and mass unemployment.

With people like the technocrats, among other radicals, all about us, there is no wonder that the working class is never satisfied I suggest that if you don't like it, you should all deport yourselves back to where you came from. But who would populate this country?

Are Ethiopians People?

Now that General Braggedocio, or whoever it was, has captured Ethiopia, the question arises: Are Ethiopians people? There seems to be a doubt about it, now that the learned savants have thought it over,—for there seems to be a great resemblance to the American Indian case, where it was proved conclusively that Indians were not people.

The main point in the proof is this: They were not advanced enough to take advantage of their opportunities. Take America, for example. One American Indian often starved on a huge slice of territory where now, by the latest means of production and aids of science, thousands can starve.

The Ethiopians were cruel, say news dispatches. They kicked their dogs, whipped their horses, and beat their wives. Besides this, they practiced the crime of living in tribes; and the united resistance they displayed when Mussolini's brigands first entered Ethiopia only aggravated the crime. The more tenaciously they resisted, the more criminal they became.

For all these reasons, and many more, they showed conclusively that they were not people at all, but just a bunch of criminals, bent on destroying the legions of civilization, which came with an olive branch (with olives) in one hand and a gas-bomb in the other. The Ethiopians got what was coming to them.

The Washington Commentator

By E. C. Stengelsen

THE U. S. CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

The U. S. Chamber of Commerce has just concluded its annual convention, held this year in Washington.

• • • •

On the chance that there may be readers who are a bit hazy on the exact identity of the organization, the explanation is offered that in a general way, the Chamber and its 750,000 members represent American industry.

• • • •

While the Chamber will, of course, vehemently deny the accusation; the impression nevertheless prevails that its social, economic and political leanings are distinctly 'reactionary' in character

Indeed, one suspects that it could comfortably sleep in the same bed with those other two apostles of 'Toryism', the American Liberty League and the Republican Party, without being bothered too much by their snoring.

. . . Though each would probably be trying to hog the whole quilt!

But Silas Strawn, one of the Chamber's heap big chiefs, would doubtless be able to maintain harmony. For not only is he on such intimate terms with the DuPont-owned Liberty League that he and DuPont almost wear each other's socks, but he is also a prominent member of the Republican National Finance Committee.

• • • •

Just before the end of the convention (which is to say immediately preceding the bromo seltzer stage), the Chamber passed a string of resolutions. . .

Firstly, it frowns heavily upon governmental regulation of such matters as wages, hours, conditions and terms of employment. It insists that these are questions with which the government should not concern itself; that business is quite competent to dispose of them properly . . . presumably in the old, time-hallowed manner which has always been so satisfactory—satisfactory to business, that is to say.

Also, the Chamber disapproves of the government's social security program for the workers. It maintains that business is quite capable of looking after this itself

How Industry expects anybody to believe this, in view of its past record of utter and callous indifference toward the worker, is a little bit puzzling. Judging by past performance, its assurances in this regard would seem to be entitled to about the same amount of confidence as a politician's promises at election time.

• • • •

The Administration's new tax bill, which seeks to reach the undivided surpluses of corporations, is all wrong, naturally. The Chamber howls its protest against the threat that the fingers of government tax collectors are going to be permitted to rummage about in the corporate pants pockets for the shekels which have heretofore jingled there, snug and safe.

Not that the Chamber is opposed to taxation! It concedes, magnanimously, that taxes may be proper, now and then. But it does object, emphatically, to the plan that Industry shall come across.

The alternatives suggested by the Chamber are a bit vague and confusing; but out of the verbiage one is able to sift the thought that it is the other fellow who should do the shelling out.

Government competition with private industry was also scored. For example, when the Tennessee Valley project was mentioned, the Chamber's ponderous and official comment was that "Hydroelectric development is a proper function of private enterprise and should not be undertaken by the Federal Government."

In other words, that succulent oyster belongs to Industry as a collection of individuals, and not to the people of the United States.

• • • •

To its members, the Chamber's deliberations are doubtless weighty and profound. But among the populace, there are those irreverent ones, here and there, who find them merely amusing.

For who has not seen political campaigns conducted which had for their object the election of some business man, that the particular governmental unit might be blessed with a "hard-headed business administration!"

And who has not seen, too, how these usually turned out! . . . How it invariably came to pass that instead of being 'hard-headed', they were merely 'thick-headed'

Tess: I don't know, but he surely is for Scotch!

Dear Editor:

Your editorial, comparing the Republican platform with their record of past activities hits the nail on the head. It shows up those "promising Republicans" and was surely good.

Dear Mr. Editor :

Your recent editorial on my Kansas trip has been tremendously enjoyed, and I hasten belatedly to express some sort of sentiment or other.

You know, I think you are right—that I am at least as boneheaded as you suggest, and probably even more In fact, my good Norse skull is so thick that I regard your editorial as a very delightful compliment. It forces me to the conclusion that my stories were a success, that they contained some things that would delight anyone who wished to view Mr. Landon with alarm.

In fact, I am forced to believe I must have given a reasonably honest picture of Landon and Kansas, the good points and the bad, and that, believe it or not, was what I had in mind to do. I enjoyed the trip, liked Landon, found writing the stories a pleasure, but was not really very much concerned in anything but such a reporting job as I was capable of.

Sincerely,
LEIF H. GILSTAD

EDITOR'S NOTE: Mr. Gilstad is welcome to all the satisfaction he can get from our editorial. His reporting proves that he had an opportunity to go to school and learn English. His letter indicates that he either, never had an original idea in his life, or is so enamored with his meal ticket that he would do anything to keep it. But why blame his thick Norse skull? We consider that a poor compliment to the Norse, a nationality which is probably the only thing we have in common.

WANTS INFLATION

To the Editor:

S. W. Wilder, president of the Grain and Feed Dealers' National association, in his speech at their convention at Sioux City stated that the different farm legislation was "seemingly passed under the hallucination that government and legislation cannot only correct all economic ills, but can neutralize the law of supply and demand, and equalize production and distribution with consumption."

Then later in this same talk, he stated that "strange as it may seem, an examination of the records of the department of agriculture, discloses that without exception, years of scarcity have not been years of high prices, and that the years of large farm production have been the years of record farm income."

After making these statements he goes on to show that the tariff has hindered foreign trade, and seems to infer that this is the cause of low farm prices

If he was right in this inference, he must have the same "hallucination" that he claims the lawmakers have, because all tariffs certainly come under the classification of "legislation and government".

Thus we see that big industrialists fall for shipping interest and international bankers propaganda, even more so than the common people. I have yet to find the farmer who defends the present trade treaties, lowering tariffs to reduce prices after having reduced production at home, and importing farm products by the shiploads.

If the American people have become so dull of thinking that they fall for all this propaganda about the "danger of inflation" and the great need for free trade, the ultimate result will naturally be to reduce our common folks to the level of the living standards of the countries we must compete with, even if it be an uncivilized country with starvation wages.

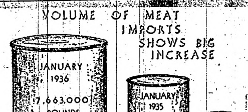
The three most common ways of legalizing stealing is usury, excessive profits and excessive salaries, but worse is the manipulation of our medium of exchange. This is not the willing game of our small banks, but of the big, international banking interests who are against the independent banks and do all they can to break them, and have succeeded terribly well since 1920. First the farmers got the inflation and then the banks and the businessmen.

Why be so stupid as to oppose inflationary measures, such as the Frazier-Lemke Bill and the Townsend Plan? You have not been shocked when learning that there are 14,827 millionaires in the United States, and that thousands of swivel-chair folks pull down salaries of from $25,000 to $800,000, have you? Then why be shocked if someone proposes the Townsend Plan? It will force money into circulation for buying goods, while at present about all the conservative people will invest in is bonds, because real estate has little value and will have less unless inflation is used.

Now how can you figure that it is better to have 11,000,000 people out of work and on relief or suffering, than to force money into circulation and thus get at least the young people back to work?

We must either get back our self respect and feeling of equal rights as against the grafting crowd that has ruined the country, or we will surely have a dictator, and then those who are so indolent, they won't think now will have plenty of time to realize how foolish they were to sell their liberty for nothing.

ANDREW TROVATON



American markets continue to attract large quantities of meat from foreign countries as evidenced by the recent Department of Commerce report on imports, says the Livestock Market digest of the Central Co-Operative Association of South St. Paul. The volume of imports on beef and pork reached new high marks for January. Imports of canned meat, mostly from South America, during January were 84 per cent greater than in January 1935 and nearly 400 per cent greater than during January 1934.

These vast imports of meat come directly in competition with domestic meats and are a factor adversely influencing the livestock market.

In South America, particularly the Argentine, grazing season is much longer than in this country, and cost of beef production is low. In the Argentine there are approximately 3,000 head of cattle for every 1,000 persons. In the United States there are 450 head of cattle for every 1,000 persons

As a consequence, Argentina must dispose of around 2,000,000,000 pounds of beef annually in other countries. Increasing quantities of canned meats are being displayed in grocery stores and in butcher shops in the cities and towns of this country. Sad, but true—many American citizens eat the "stuff".

Look twice at UPKEEP!

FOLLOW through on the cost of owning a Buick and you'll see why some of our best customers are former owners of very low-priced cars.

In the first place, the time payments on a Buick Special are only a very few dollars a week more than on the lowest-priced cars. By the time you've finished "dressing up" a small car, most of that difference vanishes.

But on top of that, because of Buick's longer life, more rugged build, greater quality down to the last nut and bolt, and truly amazing low cost for gas and oil—the end-cost of owning and operating a Buick compares favorably, to say the least, with the cost of any car!

That's a challenging statement, we know. But we have some mighty interesting arithmetic to back it up. If you're still under the impression that a car of Buick's size and ability is an expensive car to buy or own—let us show you the new facts. They'll open your eyes.

IT COSTS LESS NOW TO BUY "ON TIME"

The new GMAC 6% TIME PAYMENT PLAN reduces the cost of financing a new car purchase. Use these savings to get a better car—a car that's a joy to own, a thrill to drive—a safe, smart, new Buick that packs pleasure in every mile. We'll gladly show you the exact figures and how much you save.

the city will defray nominal expenses of the junket.

The library board reported that Frank B. Curtice, the library janitor has resigned and that it has appointed Bert Larson to fill the vacancy. The council approved the action. Following request abutting property owners, the council ordered the installation of ornamental light posts on LaBree avenue from Third street to Fourth street and also on Main avenue between the same two streets.

A communication was received from the state board of health advising the city that the board can not approve plans for a bath house at Tindolph Park in view of the fact that the city's water supply is being taken from the river below the bathing beach. The board recommends that the city extend its water intake up the river above the bathing beach or construct a swimming pool from which the water can be filtered before re-entering the river. The matter was laid on the table for further consideration, but indications are that the bathhouse project which was to be financed with WPA funds will be dropped.

Application for taxi license was received from Harry Barnsholdt and upon being approved by the mayor was ordered issued. A refreshment license transfer from Pat Roark to Granum was approved and application for a dry cleaners license was laid on the table when John Narverud protested its issuance on the ground that the applicant, Dorothy Erickson, has no cleaning plant in the city.

Residents of north Main and adjoining residential districts sent in a protest petition, disapproving of the erection of a service station at Main and Eight streets and the city clerk was instructed to issue orders for the cessation of construction until the owner has submitted plans and specification for approval by the council and nearby property owners.

Applications for building permits were granted to the following: H. M. Grondahl, a residence to cost about $4500; Stanton Dahlen, res. $4000; Wm Froiland, res. $2700; Oscar Anderson, res. $3500; Lester Ringstrand, res. $2500; A. B. Stenberg, addition, $1000; E. O. Ness, remodel, $150; Soren Bergland, remodel $450; May Severson, remodel, $50; Iver Aaseby, add. $800; Martin Bothun, garage, $175; and O. S. Cerny, repairs $125.

Advertising for 20,000 gals. of road oil was decided upon. This is to cover street oiling as follows: 4th street from Main avenue to the G. N. tracks and from Horace avenue to Main; LaBree avenue from 4th to 8th streets; Atlantic avenue from 2nd to 8th streets; 2nd street from Horace to Atlantic avenues. The street commissioner was authorized to commence the building of stock gravel piles for the project.

An additional centrifuge was purchased at a cost of $1120 to be installed for the purification of lubrication oil at the diesel power plant. The centrifuge being used for this purpose at the present time will be then installed on the fuel line, purifying the crude oil the superintendent of power and light stated.

An offer to settle the disputed claim for sewer pipe which was laid on Dewey avenue two years ago and which subsequently broke in numerous places, at 50 percent was accepted. A resolution was addressed to the state highway department requesting that "No U Turn" signs be erected at the curb on intersections of trunk highways in the downtown district of the city.

Sewers will be re-constructed from the alley between Markley avenue and Kendall avenue to Kendall avenue on Johnson street and a 90 foot strip of new sewer construction will be laid on St. Paul avenue south between James and Nora streets.

State Filings-

O. Melby. The two latter are farmer-labor endorsed.

Quite a furore was kicked up when Guy Howard filed for the "short term" for senator existence of which was apparently overlooked by the other candidates since only Theo. Christianson specified in his filing affidavit that he was filing for the six year term commencing Jan. 1st, 1937. The other candidates failed to specify what term they were filing for and some political prognosticators held that they had not legally filed at all. Others maintained that inasmuch as it would be impossible for anyone to qualify for the short term from Nov. 3 until Jan. 1st since the senate is not in session during that period, that the term does not exist. The point was settled by Attorney General Harry H. Peterson early this week when he ruled that Howard has legally filed for the short term and that his name must appear on the ballot accordingly. Other candidates are assumed to have filed for the regular term and may be required to file supplementary affidavits.

MEETING AT RED L. FALLS TO TRY FORMING LEAGUE

Junior Civic and Commerce Joins With Other Towns In Baseball Effort

An effort will be made at a meeting at Red Lake Falls this evening to form a baseball league with teams entered from Red Lake Falls, Thief River Falls, Oklee, St. Hilaire and other Northern Minnesota towns. The Junior Civic and Commerce association of this city is sending delegates to the meeting and plan on entering a team if the league materializes.

The local organization will place a team in the field this season as an independent if the league should not be formed, members of the Junior Civic and Commerce stated today. They believe that there is ample good baseball material in this community to form a strong team and have decided to sponsor the organization. An effort is being made to co-operate with the Elmer J. Ecklund post of the American Legion in securing a coach who may be able to do double duty as coach for a senior as well as the proposed junior baseball teams in this city

The civic group is inviting all persons interested in baseball to contact them at the earliest opportunity.

When he was six years of age, the family moved to this city, and William made his home here until two years ago when he returned to Virginia. He was employed in the mines in Kentucky since last fall. He is survived by his parents, five sisters, and one brother.

Warren Will Vote On Paving May 26th

A special election for the purpose of deciding a proposal that the city be bonded to finance a paving project will be held May 26 in Warren

The issue would be for $20,000 to pay Warren's share of paving highway No. 75 through the city. The state and federal governments are preparing to pave a center strip and the city council proposes to have the remaining strips on either side paved at the same time, provided the bond issue carries.

Two diesel powered auto-graders to be used on the Marshall county highway system were purchased by the board of commissioners, H. T. Swanson, county highway engineer, announced.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to extend thanks to the many friends for the kindness and sympathy shown us during the bereavement of our son and brother. Also for the floral offering.

MAKING SURE

"I'm sorry," said the diner after he had done himself well in the London restaurant, "but I'm afraid I haven't the money to pay your bill. What are you going to do about it?"

The head waiter smilingly shrugged his shoulders.

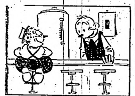
"Oh, that's quite all right, sir!" he replied. "We'll just get you to write your name on the wall and you can pay the next time you come in."

The diner gasped.

"What!" he cried. "Write my name on the wall? Why, all my friends will see it when they come in. I couldn't possibly do that."

"Oh, but they won't see it!" said the head waiter sweetly. "You see, your overcoat and hat will cover it up."—Stray Stories.

SHORT AND SHORTER



"You got a good man in your new short-order cook."

"Think so?"

"Yes; he can make an order as short as any cook I ever saw."

Easy Figuring

A sugar planter in Hawaii took a friend from the States to the edge of a volcano.

"That crater is 70,004 years old," he explained.

"How do you get the exact age?" asked the newcomer. "I can understand the 70,000, but how do you calculate the four?"

"Well, I've been here in the islands for four years, and that crater was 70,000 years old when I arrived."

One After Another

Tramp—Lady, won't you help a poor man that lost his family in the Yorkshire flood and all his money in a crash?

Housewife—Why, you are the same man that lost a family in the South Wales flood and was shell shocked during the war.

Tramp—Yes, lady, I'm the unluckiest guy on the face of the earth.—Pearsons Weekly.

Misnomer

Customer—Do you sell hams, steam-shovels, women's hats, iceless refrigerators, live chickens, setting hens, lumber, ready-cut houses, new autotops, spinach, fish-bait and that sort of thing?"

Merchant—No. All we do is fill prescriptions.

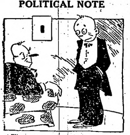
Customer—Then why do you call this a drug store?—Pathfinder Magazine.

Reversed Program

"Why don't you try to make your constituents understand problems of government?"

"That's what I have done," replied Senator Sorghum. "I have been too thorough about it. A lot of them now think that they can give advice instead of taking it."

POLITICAL NOTE



"The man who praises himself is never popular."

"No; especially with the people who think he might be praising them."

Logical Enough

"Now children," said the Sunday school teacher, "how do you suppose Noah passed his time in the ark? He must have done a lot of fishing, don't you think?"

"I think you're wrong," interrupted one small wiggler. "He couldn't fish much with only two worms."

Wild Oats at His Age

Insurance Doctor—How old was your father when he died?

Applicant (determined to pass)—One hundred and four.

Insurance Doctor—What did he die of?

Applicant—Strained his heart playing football.

He'll Never Learn

"What's the matter up at Tom's house?"

"They're taking 'im away in the ambulance for beatin' 'is missus."—Pearson's Weekly.

Neighborhood Command

Man—Aren't the Browns very high-toned people?

Friend—High-toned is right! When they quarrel you can hear them two blocks away.

CHAPTER I

THE house stood alone on a sand dune overlooking the sea—dark, deserted, and silent, except for the swish of the rain blowing against its shingles. Wet to his skin, and shivering, the Duke struggled to pry open a window.

From his dank coat pocket, the Duke drew a cheap jackknife and a tiny searchlight.

The Duke's thumb pressed the button, and, momentarily, the ray revealed waving wet beach-grass, and a single scrub pine bent in the wind. Then, carefully, he began cutting away the dry putty that held a pane of glass. It was slow work. "Why don't I break the damned thing?" the Duke asked himself, and, a minute later, felt the unshattered glass drop into his hand.

It was easy to open the window, then, and easy for a slim and agile man to climb through. Once inside the house, he paused. Would the electric lights be working, and would it be safe to turn them on? Why not? Half the summer residences in Southampton had been opened for the season. The Duke touched a switch his searchlight had disclosed beside a door.

It was exactly the sort of room he had expected—a luxurious breakfast room in a luxurious summer residence. Most of the furniture was covered, but a gay breakfast table stood in the center, and, beyond it, was an open door to a pantry. The Duke walked through, and into the kitchen, turning on lights as he went. After all, why should they mind an extra weekend guest?

He grinned, and anyone who had seen that grin might have found it hard to mind. It was an ingratiating grin, in a pleasant, likeable face. A lean face, weather-beaten and a little boney, but with large, kind, steel-gray eyes, surmounted by a thatch of unruly brick-red hair. The Duke's trim figure stretched a tidy six feet above the worn soles of his untidy boots, but his gray suit, though worn, too, and wet, was well cut and well made, revealing square shoulders and firm muscles.

"Wonder if there's any grub," said the Duke.

Above the shelves was a cupboard, and in that cupboard were rows of canned things—each can neatly wrapped in paper—sardines, anchovies, caviar, chicken, ham, tongue—all sorts of things.

Thirty minutes later, His Grace had dined sustainingly, if not well. Half the contents of the pot of coffee still bubbling on the stove warmed him comfortably, and he washed the dishes. Then he put everything back in place, turned out the lights, and, whistling merrily, went upstairs.

At the top of the steps was a kind of library—book-lined, with doors on either side, and, at its end, windows facing the sea.

Again he touched a switch, and, this time, lights sprang into being in shaded table-lamps, doubly shaded now by winter wrappings. A fire had been laid in the grate. He lit the fire, and a cigar, and then opened a door on his right.

This was a man's room, gracious and inviting. The Duke felt the mattress drawn back over the footboard of the bed, and, sniffing a pungent odor of cedar and camphor, turned his attention to a closet across the room. A very large closet, with an electric light in it, and built-in drawers, and a cedar chest. Atop the chest were two pairs of slippers, and above it hung the only garment visible, a blue-striped dressing gown of soft, light flannel. His own apparel still clinging damply, the Duke took the dressing gown and slippers back to the blazing fire, and, standing luxuriously before it, changed his clothes.

Still neat, he carried the gray suit and the wet undergarments back to the bedroom.

He returned to the fire, stretching himself lazily in a huge, overstuffed chair. Outside, the storm was growing steadily worse. Windflung against the windows, the rain kept up its incessant swish.

In the thick of it he had been an hour before. Penniless, overcoatless, trudging along the cement-paved road from Bridgehampton, five miles to the east. On foot, he had left New York that morning just after daybreak. Jobless and flat broke.

For a month—all through April; in fact—the Duke had tramped the streets looking for "a regular job." "What the h—l makes me want to keep straight?" he had asked himself, again and again. "That's all right for guys with an income. If somebody'd started me a rubber-tired pram, and wheeled me into college, and out again into papa's office—sure, I'd run straight. Why not? Who couldn't be a knight in armor? But being a knight without armor—that's different.

Still, he had struck—reasonably, at least—in the face of what seemed almost a conspiracy of discouragement. Fired out of Hollywood for a theft of which he was innocent as an unborn babe. "All right," he had said. "I'll go East, and start all over again." He had nearly frozen in Chicago. He had nearly starved. And then he had hitch-hiked to New York, riding freights when he could. A pal had christened him "the Duke," because of his clothes, and his English, and the grand manner he had acquired in Filmdom.

New York—with those Hollywood shoes wearing thin, and that Hollywood gray suit, that had cost $125, getting frayed and baggy. Part of a jobless army in a city without jobs. He had eaten his overcoat—or the proceeds from it, at any rate—and paid the last dime for a bunk in a flophouse.

A love of books, a sense of humor, and the wanderlust—these he had inherited from an Irish father, whose name was Francis X. Gilbert, and whose proudest boast was that he came from the University of Dublin. He had died in China, nearly six years ago, leaving the seventeen-year-old boy, Barry, to fight his way from Hong Kong to Hollywood, and from Chicago to New York. He found himself on the edge of Southampton.

It was black night, and beginning to rain. A cold wind had sprung up from the northeast.

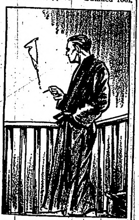
His teeth were chattering by now, and his feet squished in his wet shoes. And this house had seemed so utterly deserted, so entirely safe and secure. "Ten o'clock," said the Duke. "What's the chance of anyone finding me in here tonight? I'll be on my way again at daybreak."

Now, fed and warm, he was growing drowsy before the fire. "It must be swell to live like this all the time," he brooded, dreamily.

His head fell forward, and his eyes were closing, when he heard an automobile door slam, and, an instant later, voices and the shuffling of feet on the porch directly beneath him.

The Duke sprang up.

The breakfast room window—that was it! But not in dressing gown and slippers. "Damned fool, to take my clothes off!" thought the Duke. Who were these people, anyway, driving up to a closed house at this hour?



"Who's There?" He Called, Bravely.

Well, what next? Jail, probably. And then he heard the lower door open and a woman's voice in the hall. "Maybe I can talk my way out," he thought, and started down the stairs. "Who's there?" he called, bravely.

A man answered.

"Willetts," he said. "Willetts, the butler. Is that you, Mr. Ridder?"

And the lights went on.

Standing on the landing, the Duke found himself facing a party of four, Willetts, with his hat in his hand, squat and powerfully built and ludicrously bald. Another man in a chauffeur's uniform, and two women—one quite young, and the other middle-aged and stout. They seemed propitiatory, and the fact gave him instant courage.

"Is that you, Mr. Ridder?"

The question had been asked first in the dark, but now it was repeated in a glare that made every face plainly visible. The butler, didn't know Mr. Ridder, then. That was "a lucky break." It would give him time to dress, and get away.

"Yes," he answered, quietly. "You are a little late, aren't you?"

"Sorry, sir," said the butler. "I didn't have any idea you'd be here, sir. Your mother said you wasn't coming until tomorrow. Evans had to take 'em down to the ship—her and your father, sir. I hope you aren't going to be put out, sir."

"I hope not," the Duke replied, grinning broadly, and, seeing that grin, the four servants smiled, too.

"This is Evans, sir," the butler continued. "This is Mrs. Mulligan, Cook, sir. And Annie Jeffers, the parlor maid. If you don't mind, sir, I'll get them set, and then I'll come upstairs to report."

"Fine!" said the Duke, calculating that five minutes would get him into his clothes, and out the front door.

He was climbing the steps again when Willetts called.

"I never thought, sir. Your bed isn't made. I'll get the linen out, and have Annie up there right away.

He had scarcely got his trousers when Annie appeared with a small load of immaculate sheets and pillow cases.

"Mr. Evans is lighting the furnace," she said. "The house is that cold. I wonder you didn't think of it. But, of course, you're a stranger here, too."

"A stranger!" What did she mean by that?" Where had he been, he wondered? Evidently, not home, at any rate. So that was why Willetts hadn't known he wasn't Mr. Ridder. The Duke ventured half a question.

"Willetts isn't a stranger?"

"Of course not," Annie replied. "Nor Mr. Evans. Just Mrs. Mulligan and me. We was taken on when Madam and Mr. Ridder expected to spend the summer here, and we've been let out, I guess, when they decided to go to Germany, if it hadn't been for your coming back."

Returning to the library, trousers still in hand, Barry Gilbert encountered the ubiquitous Willetts. "I'll take those, sir," said the butler, taking them.

"Oh, never mind!"

"They'll need pressing."

"I'll need them."

"They'll be ready for you in the morning," Willetts said, with a note of finality. "Did you bring any pyjamas, sir?"

Any lie would do for now.

"Yes," answered the Duke, "but, like an idiot, I checked my suitcase, and God knows what happened to the check!"

"I'll get you a pair of your father's," Willetts volunteered. "You are very much of a size."

The Duke didn't mind. It was all "a lucky break," only—how long would it last? "Mustn't over-play my luck," thought the Duke. But the real Mr. Ridder "wasn't coming until tomorrow." Why make a break for it tonight?

"Anything else, sir?"

"No, thanks."

"I'll be leaving you then. What time breakfast, sir?"

"Oh, say eight o'clock."

"Right, sir. Good night, sir," said the butler, bowing himself out.

"Easy!" thought the Duke, standing before the fire, with the pyjamas in his hand. "Too damned easy! There's a catch in it somewhere!"

CO-OPERATIVE NEWS NOTES

Dayton D McKean, writing in the New Republic on American consumers co-operatives, says:

"Compared with the consumer's cooperative movement in European countries, the movement in the United States has always been weak, but it is growing stronger every day. It is strong enough, at any rate, to receive notice from Business Week, Printers' Ink, Tide, Retailing and Roger Babson. The sage of Babson Park recently warned his subscribers that "merchants who laugh off these consumers' crusades are sitting on dynamite."

"The Cooperative League of the United States, which is the educational agency of consumers' cooperative societies, estimated in September, 1935, that there are in the United States about 6,600 cooperative societies with approximately 1,800,000 members doing an annual business of around $365,000, or about one per cent of the country's retail trade. Membership has grown about 40 percent during the depression, and a period of rising prices with stationary wage levels, such as the present, will stimulate their growth further. There are today about 500 cooperative retail stores. The grocery stores among them seem to be able to meet chain store price competition, for their overhead expense is as low as 10.2 percent. When wholesaling costs are bulked with retailing expense, as in the statistics for chain stores, the average for the cooperatives runs two to three per cent below the chains' 20.9 per cent. As they establish wholesales they will be able to buy more cheaply and to increase their dividends to members. There are about thirty important cooperative wholesales in the country today, doing a business of around $70,000,000 a year, and the wholesales are beginning to set up manufacturing plants."

KAGAWA AT MADISON

Madison, Wis.—Kagawa of Japan,, world figure as Christian leader and foremost exponent of the cooperative movement, will visit Wisconsin for one day, Sunday, May 17, for three addresses at Madison. The sponsoring committee has issued a general invitation to people of the entire state to hear his message.

The main address, intended for the general public, will be held at 3:30 p m., and it is expected this will be made toward expenses and to further Kagawa's notable work in Japan and for the promotion of a Christian world order.

A morning meeting will be for Wisconsin cooperative, labor, and church leaders, and an evening session will be a student meeting.

In Japan the movement Kagawa heads is known as the "Kingdom of God Movement", having three objectives: Evangelism, or "One million souls for Christ;" education, or five thousand trained lay workers to aid the clergy; and social organization, especially organization of economic cooperatives.

The great Japanese Christian is American-educated, a graduate of Princeton Theological seminary (1915), with the degree of bachelor of divinity. The work for which he is best known includes record-breaking advances in the Japan labor movement, the organization of consumer cooperatives; relief work and starting of churches following the 1923 earthquake, sacrificial labors in the slums of Kobe, abolition of the redlight districts, and leadership in the anti-tuberculosis movement and the Japan mission to lepers.

OFF TO SET NEW RECORD

Lakehurst, N. J.—With 50 passengers and two tons of freight, the giant German dirigible Hindenburg left late Monday night on the return leg of her maiden voyage to the United States. Her westward trip from Friedrichshafen was made in 61 hours 35 minutes, a new record. Dr. Hugo Eckener, her commander, seeks a 45-hour Eastern crossing.

ITALIAN KING AN EMPEROR

Geneva, Switzerland—All Europe awaits League of Nations action on the annexation of Ethiopia and the declaration of the King of Italy as Emperor. Until formal action is taken, sanctions will still be enforced against Italy as a treaty-breaker.

IN NO HURRY

Old Forge, N. Y.—Charles Jeannette was 99 years old last week and pondered his contemplated marriage to an Albany widow. "However", he said, "marriage is a serious business and we'll have to talk things over some more before deciding."

ARABS STRIKE AGAINST JEWS

Jaffa, Palestine— Denouncing the British policy of Jewish immigration and land settlement, Arab leaders decreed a general strike and refusal to pay taxes. Government orders keep both Jews and Arabs in their homes. Sir Arthur Grenfell Wauchope, British High Commissioner, has ordered a mobilization of troops to prevent further Jewish-Arabian clashes

GOVERNMENT LAUGHS LAST

New York City—When the Securities Exchange Commission tried to stop J. Edward Jones from selling his "oil royalties', he carried his battle to the Supreme Court and last April won a temporary victory, in which SEC was warned not to meddle with business. But Washington authorities have played their trump card. Mr. Jones was indicted by a Federal Grand Jury on charges of fraud which, if he is found guilty, would render him liable to 75 years in prison. Pleading not guilty he called the action "mad persecution advanced to the most pitiable stages of New Dealirium."

A STITCH IN TIME

Washington, D. C.—When a visitor knocked over Mrs. Wallace Powell's aquarium, a glass chip cut one of her goldfish in two. Grabbing needle and thread, Mrs. Powell deftly sewed her pet "just as if I were mending a pair of pants." In two days the goldfish was swimming around as usual.

THEY GET THEIR MEN

Washington, D. C.—One lone kidnaper, an adolescent who favors feminine attire, alone remains of the numerous band which G-men started to round up four years ago. In all 56 were convicted, 7 acquitted, 1 committed suicide, 5 were killed, 2 were lynched, 1 was executed and 3 await trial

BUSINESS CONTINUES GAINS

New York City—Of 73 corporations reporting their first quarter's business during the week, 50 showed increases, 23 declines. Of the latter, 6 were utilities, the remainder scattered among tobacco, ice, oil, candy, iron and steel and other less active industries.

HUMORIST QUITS TEACHING

Montreal, Canada—Few of the hundreds of thousands who have laughed over Stephen Leacock's whimsicalities have pictured him as head of the Department of Political Economy at McGill University. He retires this month because of his 67 years, and thirteen other McGill professors quit for the same reason. At a dinner given in his honor in New York, Dr. Leacock said "This is my last lecture. I see on the faces about me that stamp which is set on all my students—an irremovable look of resigned despair."

"DEPRESSION DOCTOR" LOSES

Washington, D. C.—Charging that the Hoover Administration fired him from his job in the Income Tax Bureau, then adopted his plans for ending the depression, John Knight Munro Barry sued Uncle Sam for $10,032,000, at which he estimated the value of his ideas. The Court of Claims disclaimed jurisdiction in an action involving "the right of office;" handed Mr. Barry a bill for $45 costs.

AUTO RADIOS INCREASE

New York City—According to statistics gathered by the Columbia Broadcasting System, there are more than 3,000,000 motor cars now equipped with radios, and that the end of the year will see 5,000,000.

The time between the culmination of the scout competitions and supper will be taken up with a demonstration of scout games under the leadership of Mr. E. R. Clark of the Northwest School of Agriculture at Crookston.

After supper there will be a court of honor under the direction of L. S. Hess, C. W. Pope, and B. O. Norby The court will be conducted around a campfire, and the boys who are qualified will receive the awards or ranks for which they have qualified.

General arrangements for the camporee are being made by G. H. Mayer-Oakes, scout commissioner for the Thief River Falls district. Peter DeJong, area executive, will be present to have general oversite over all events.

The purpose of this camporee is not to pick the best patrol or troop, but to stimulate scout craft and the troops program among troops by providing an opportunity to meet with other scouts in friendly competition.

This camporee is open to all registered scouts of the Thief River Falls, Warren, and Crookston districts. Scoring will be on the basis of quality and speed in competition with the standard. For instance, in the first aid, it will be possible for all troops to score alike. It is expected that the troops will bring along and have on display knot boards, soap and wood carvings, and handicraft of various descriptions, Mr. Mayer-Oakes announced.

4-H Projects-

All girls interested in the project are urged to get in touch with Pennington County 4-H Club Leader, Miss Thelma Solie of this city.

The Junior Forestry Home Nursery Project, for which any 4-H member, either boy or girl, is eligible, is being organized for the purpose of pointing out simple methods that may be undertaken by the average farm boy or girl which will result in the growing of trees for home and community needs by means of home nurseries.

Each club member must have a small portion of land (1-4 acre) on which to develop a small seedbed and grow transplants. Enough trees must be raised for planting one adequate shelter bed or to restock one or more acres of woodlot which means about one thousand small trees. Records must be kept as to growth and results, and a summary of activities reported to the county agent or club leader, and later the State Club Leader and extension forester.

The Red River Valley Development Association offers to aid the 4-H club treeplanting project in its area to the extent of paying $100.00 in prizes, this amount to be distributed as planting stock prizes between the counties.

aiding "in spreading a damnable poison in the nation." Rankin, (D-Miss) also flayed Green for having the impudence of coming into the congress to tell the congress of the United States how they should vote on matters that affected the welfare of the farmers of the nation.

Several amendments were offered by the sponsors of the Bill to make it more attractive to the members of the House, among them one which would cut down the loans to not to exceed 80 per cent of the value of the farms. The measure originally called for loans up to 100 per cent. Another change removed the provision for loans on livestock and limited the measure to loans on real estate only.

The Bill would have authorized the issuance of new treasury money up to $3,000,000,000 to refinance farm indebtedness. Farmers would pay 1 1-2 per cent interest and 1 1-2 per cent amortization annually over 47 years under its provisions. It was supported by memorializing resolutions from 38 state legislatures.

Party lines were smashed in the final vote with 173 democrats and 62 republicans voting against it, and 105 democrats, 27 republicans, 7 progressives and 3 farmer-laborites voting for it.

By Bob Fisher
A Youth News Service Feature

The million dollar gate, an elusive will-o-the-wisp since Tex. Rickard cashed in his chips, is, in a more than faintly familiar phrase, just around the corner. June in fact, will again usher in, before 100,000 assorted addicts, the perennial Battle of the Century. And good old Tex, that supreme lurer of gulden from the gullible, will hover ghostly about the box-office, and chuckle as the take mounts into seven figures

All this was made possible by an obscure auto mechanic who was startled to learn that there was a destroying drive in his leather encased fists. He stormed out of Detroit, belted out a few second rate stumble bums with deadly dispatch, and found himself in the big dough. Bigger names naturally followed. He crushed the clumsy but courageous Carnera in six rounds. The set-to with Baer, at this point, was the most important of his comparatively short career. The handsome Baer, fistiana's funny man, after absorbing plenty of punishment, quit cold in the fourth stanza. Louis the phlegmatic flogger, loomed as an all time great after this so-called fight. Braddock? He was only the lucky boy who owned the title—until he'd meet Jarring Joe. . . All this is ancient history, I know. But in justice to the point of view, I must sketchily indicate why this sudden resurrection of the late and lamented million dollar gate.

Schmelling, the smiling Schlager, is the unfortunate young man who will be the party of the second part in the Louis go. This last may sound like the statement of one congenitally crazy, as Herr Moxie will receive in the neighborhood of three hundred thousand bucks (a pretty good neighborhood) for this jolly joust. But Schmeling is quite a good looking young cuss. And reputedly intelligent About the third or fourth round of this epic to come, he will be in grave danger of parting with both prettiness and reason. Many an addle-pated ex-pug got that way from facing less iron fists than Joe's. Indeed, thousands of fight fans think the Cherman boy'll be lucky to escape with his life. We are harboring a very strong suspicion that this not too remorte accident is the prime incentive that will draw a crowd of 100,000 to the Stadium the night of June 18. There the mob'll mill about, jostle one another, shout and argue for the privilege of forking over more than a million iron men, all in order to witness the bloody, bruising battle ending in a quick, but not too quick knockout.

Some two thousand years ago the Romans invented a pleasant little something called the Cestus. This, according to Funk & Wagnalls, was "a device of thongs, often loaded, wound about the hands and arms in boxing." Gladiators, armed with these murderous weapons, went at it hammer and tongs in the ill-famed Coliseum in order to relieve the tedium of existence for a bored Nero or a sated Augustus. More often than not the defeated fighter lay still in death at the feet of his conqueror. The exhilarated throngs cheered; the Emperor placed a wreath on the victor's head; and the carcass which had so recently been a man was carelessly carted away.

Perhaps the present boxing glove is a more humane instrument of torture than the cestus of antiquity; perhaps the sweat stiffened tape which binds all boxers' hands, is not a jolting, ripping, tearing knife as an offensive weapon; perhaps a six ounce mitten of leather offers adequate protection against the bone-crushing blows of a powerful puncher. . . Deny, tho, if you can, that literally thousands of young men walk, or stagger down our streets in a condition lightly labeled "Punch Drunk". Deny though, if you can, that far too many expert boxers of the past (Pete Herman and Sam Langford are two pitiful instances), are blind men because of their erstwhile profession. Deny, though, if you can, that every so often some misled lad is killed in the ring. (At once, that is, not after a few years, due to some malady traceable to his former fighting days.)

And yet, nevertheless and notwithstanding, 100,000 hysterical fans, shouting "Kill him, Joe" or "Beat his brains out, Maxie!" will prove the superiority of civilization [illegible] by paying a million bucks to see two men fight.

State Highway Dept. Starts Landscaping at New Bridge

Hundreds of Evergreens to be Planted and Plots To be Sodded

COST BEING CARRIED BY THE FED. GOV'T.

Picnic Grounds and Scout Camping Grounds Are Being Planned

A crew of workmen under the supervision of the state highway department, started yesterday on the work of beautifying and landscaping the river banks and adjoining park system along the parkway entrance to the city The work will extend from Red Lake Boulevard on the west side of the river and east to the city limits.

This work which is being completed at no cost to the city, the project being a part of the national roadside beautifications program, will include planting a hedge of evergreens at each side of the roadway at the west end of the bridge and landscaping the terrain to join with the Elks Memorial park. Evergreen hedges will also be planted at the east approach to the bridge as well as at each end of the islands in the parkway from the bridge to Maple street.

The park at the north of the east end of the bridge will be landscaped and made into a public picnic ground and boy scout camping ground. A council circle will be installed and a fireplace as well as settees. Trees will be set out and the river bank will be sloped and sodded on both sides of the river.

Wool Pool Opens Here On Monday

The local wool pool warehouse opened Monday with Hans Anton, local manager, in charge. The grader, Mr. Neil Huddleston of Wabasha is expected to arrive at any hour, Mr. Anton stated.

Prospects for a good price and a splendid clip are the very best, Mr. Anton stated today. Some wool has already been received and indicates that the quality will be as good or better than the average this year,' and the price should, because of the low storage stock of wool on hand in centers be the best for years.

Chalmers and Miss Thompson Tender Resignations to Special Board Meeting

Spener Addresses the F-L Club on Friday

F T. Spencer of Crookston addressed the Thief River Falls farmer-labor club at its meeting on Friday evening, pinch-hitting for Gotfried Lindsten, candidate for lieutenant governor, who was unable to attend the meeting.

Charles Louis DeReu, of Marshall, who was scheduled to address the meeting was prevented from attending due to the fact that he was busy on a federal court case. A telegram received by Herman A. Kjos, secretary of the club on Thursday afternoon from Mr. DeReu conveyed regrets at the circumstances which made it impossible for him to be here and expressed the hope that he would be able to come at a later date.

RURAL CREDIT FIELDMEN HOLD CONFAB MON.

Department Chiefs and Soil Expert Attend Local Meetings

NEW SALES PROGRAM TO BE INAUGURATED

Crop Payment Plan to Allow Former Owners to Repossess

A rural credit district fieldmen's conference was held in this city on Monday and Tuesday of this week with 19 fieldmen from this city, Detroit Lakes, Fertile, Hallock and Roseau in attendance. Attending the conference were also C. F. Gaarenstroom, chief of the legal department, and Kent Holen, sales manager of the Minnesota rural credit department, and Dr. Nissen, soil expert from University farm at St. Paul.

The meetings were in the nature of educational conferences, in which the fieldmen were instructed in soils and legume and grain crops, and made acquainted with the provisions of the federal soil conservation program. A new and what is expected to be a far-reaching program of farm sales to delinquent debtors and former owners was also outlined by Mr. Gaarenstroom.

This sales program will make it possible for delinquent debtors and former owners to repossess their farms thru crop payments and provides that any who qualifies under the plan may contract to pay for his farm on one third payment of crops each year to the department. This share will be applied to interest and principal as far as it will go, but in no event can the farmer run behind, since in case the crop payment does not cover the interest, a receipt in full will be issued by the department notwithstanding. In case of a total crop failure the farmer will still be issued a receipt for full payment of interest.

The conditions of the contract specifies that at least 50 percent of the farm must be under cultivation and the farmer must pay the taxes, and insurance. One third of all harvested crops and hay constitutes the payment. The farmer can any time during the term of the contract, which runs for five years, petition the department for a new appraisal and purchase on the basis of the new appraisal on regular twice a year payments. After the term of five years has expired, an appraisal of the farm will be made and the farmer can then purchase on contract for deed, or relinquish the property, as he may see fit.

The department will check up and plat all bureau farms in the near future for the purpose of complying with the requirements of the soil conservation act and several checkers will be put to work in this territory on this work.

Republican Leaders Look to Fascism To Save America For Special Privilege

By A. I. Harris

Enter upon the American political scene one Thomas Nixon Carver, professor of political economy, emeritus of Harvard. Professor Carver speaks of a "fourth party", but he is really mouthing the thoughts of some of the Republican leaders who are looking longingly in the direction of fascism......

The professor speaks of the "strong races" of the past who went out and just took land when they needed it. Of course, we in America throw people in jail who take things by force which do not belong to them. But why find fault with the professor? He adds: "In this respect (the strong races who took by force what did not belong to them) they were, on the intellectual, if not on the moral side, far ahead of our present day economic planners outside of Italy, Germany and Japan."......

Barring of marriages until the contracting parties can afford to buy and operate an automobile.

Easing or elimination of government regulation and restraint on business.

There is not a little evidence that Professor Emeritus Carver is "brain truster" not for a "fourth party," but for a considerable section of the good old G O. P., which is leaning strongly towards fascism but lacks the intellectual and moral courage to come out boldly......

In Minnesota, the Republican party is trying very hard to put on the smile of the liberal. "We were only fooling when we opposed liberal legislation in the past," they are saying. "Don't take seriously what we did for the 'fat boys' and the corporations. Our hearts always beat for the dear people." The party is playing the role of the wolf in the Little Red Riding Hood fable. But every now and then the fangs show themselves. It is almost impossible to keep them concealed all the time.

Special State Convention to Be Held at City Aud. June 22

Delegates From All Parts Of the State to Take Up Name Change

NATIONALLY KNOWN LEADERS TO SPEAK

Convention Call Follows State Board Meeting at Moorhead Wednesday

The Minnesota Farmers Union will hold a special convention in this city on Monday June 22, Robert Miller, of Underwood, state president of the organization announced to the Forum over telephone last evening.

The call for the convention came as a result of a meeting of the state board of the union at the Comstock hotel at Moorhead yesterday, at which time the board also decided to hold the convention in this city, following invitation from the Kratka local No 1 Pennington county and Thos. Bjerke, chairman of the Pennington county farmer-labor association.

About 100 delegates from all parts of the state and hundreds of union members are expected to attend the convention, Mr. Miller stated. The meeting is called for the purpose of taking up the question of changing the organization's name or appealing to the supreme court from an injunction issued recently which would prevent the group from using its present name on the grounds that it infringes on the rights of the Farmers Cooperative and Educational Union of America.

The convention will be for one day only and will be crowded full of action from 10 a. m., until late at night, Mr. Miller stated, because a large program is contemplated. Nationally known farm leaders will be on the speaking program, Mr. Miller stated, among them, it is hoped to secure Chas. C. Talbott president of the farmers union, North Dakota division.

Pennington county members of the Farmers Union will meet with the Kratka local on Wednesday, June 3rd, for the purpose of laying the plans for the staging of the convention and giving the affair the widest possible publicity thruout the Northern section of the state. Thos. O'Leary, farmers union leader of Wilkin county and member of the federal soil conservation administration staff will attend this meeting to assist with the details and to address the meeting

Highway Survey Shows Two Million in Damage

Abnormal Season Sends State's Extra-Expense and Loss Past $8,000,000 Mark

Minnesota's trunk highway system suffered abnormal damage of more than $2,000,000 this spring as an aftermath of the unusually severe winter, according to figures submitted to Highway Commissioner N. W. Elsberg by maintenance engineers of the state highway department.

This total does not include damage to bridges in recent spring floods nor abnormal expense incurred in plowing snow off the roads this year.

Total abnormal expenditures and road and bridge damage resulting from unusual weather conditions since January 1 this year approximate more than $3,000,000, listed by Mr. Elsberg as follows:

Damage to gravel roads	$1,116,000
Bituminous treated gravel roads	905,000
Shoulders, slopes and ditches	110,000
Bridges and culverts	200,000
Abnormal snow removal expense	750,000

"This situation, combined with reduced maintenance funds resulting from lowered automobile license fees, creates a serious situation for the trunk highway system," Mr. Elsberg said. "Federal funds cannot be used for maintenance work, so our expenditures are limited in this field to available state revenues

"Minnesota's experience with the weather this year should be sufficient proof of the danger in cutting down highway revenues below a reasonable margin of safety. After abnormal cold and snow in the winter, we experienced a spring cloudburst in the southern part of the state. Such contingencies must be provided for or our trunk highway system cannot be satisfactorily maintained."

A. T. X. Co-op Colony Acquires Small Tractor

The A. T. X. Co-operative colony at Crosslake, Minn., recently procured a garden tractor to enable them to take care of their extensive gardening operations. They have also secured an additional team but they are yet a little short on livestock and can take in some new members with horses, cows or poultry.

During the past week they have had as visitors, Webster Powell, of the Farm Research, Inc., Washington, D. C., Rev John Flint of Underwood, Minn., Mrs. Jack Kraywinkel of Fergus Falls, Mr. Hans R. Miller of Morris, Miss Molly Paulson of Minneapolis and Mr. Robert Miller, president of the Minnesota Farmers Union.

Slow CCC Enrollment Worries the Officers

Disturbed by failure to find enough recruits to fill the ranks of the government's pride of the forests to its allotted strength of 350,000, Director Robert Fechner has ordered state officers to disregard previous quotas and accept any qualified boy from a relief family.

C. C. C. officers are frankly alarmed by the increased number of desertions from the service in recent months. Estimates of the number who "take a walk" out of the camps each week run as high as 5,000. With election just around the corner and government big wigs ready to boast of the accomplishments of the boys in khaki, widely-circulated stories of mass desertions would be as pleasant as blue-berry pie stains on your new white flannel pants.

In an attempt to cover up the exodus from the camps, Director Fechner has sought to show that jobs are draining the ranks—but the camps are almost entirely isolated from the large industrial centers where jobs are to be found.

Furthermore, government and private agency figures on employment show nothing to warrant believing that 40,000 jobs are being filled by C. C. C. boys alone.

The situation has been acute for some time. Extension of the enrollment period and the letting down of the bars to youngsters from 17 up to 28—instead of the previous 17-25 limits—failed to do the trick. The enlistment period, originally scheduled to terminate April 15, was pushed back a month.

Deserters give many reasons for their departures, ranging from acute home-sickness to dislike of food, bad living and working conditions, and the army discipline found in many of the camps. Many of them avoid dishonorable discharges by having their friends or relatives write them of jobs waiting in the old home town. It is from these excuses that Fechner undoubtedly draws his optimistic estimates of the increasing number of jobs for America's depression-struck younger generation.

AC Instructor to Make Home Projects Survey

Mr. R. J. Christgau, of the Northwest School will be in Pennington county during the week of May 11-16 inspecting the various projects in agriculture and home economics which are being carried out on the farms and in the homes of Pennington county students during the summer months. This work, which supplements the classroom instruction, is required of all students prior to graduation. Students are given an opportunity to select one or more projects from a wide variety of farm and home activities including: herd management, pureseed production, tractor operation, windbreak plantings, home beautification, sewing, and cooking.

During the first trip of inspection, instruction is given each student as to method of organizing and developing the project, together with the keeping of complete records. The plan of offering six months intensive class and laboratory instruction, followed by six months practical work on the farm or in the home, has been found to be an effective method of presenting vocational education

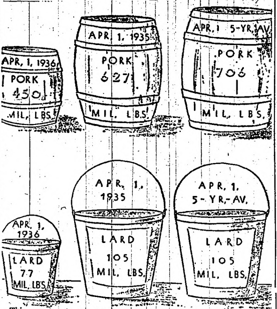
U. S. Storage Stocks of Pork and Lard Light



This country is going into the summer season short on pork and lard, and with no indication of material increased supplies from hog marketings, says the market bulletin issued by the Central Co-Operative Association of South St. Paul. Reports from the various storage centers of the United States are decidedly bullish as far as hog prices are concerned, and under ordinary conditions the price effect would be much greater than it is. But with uncertain industrial conditions and purchasing power on the part of the consuming public, the market on hogs is doing well to hold its present levels.

At any rate pork and lard stocks held in storage are small, and for this season of the year they are the smallest since records of storage stocks have been made. On April 1 this year pork stocks were 450,000,000 lbs., or 28 per cent less than a year ago and 36 per cent less than the five-year average for that date. April 1 stocks have been double the present amount many times in past years.

Storage stocks of lard in this country on April 1 amounted to 77,000,000 lbs. or about 27 per cent less than a year ago and the five-year average for that date Present lard stocks are less than half the amount on hand for this season in many years.

New Road Plan Survey To Cover Entire State

Within the next few weeks field activity in Minnesota's highway planning survey will become general over the state, according to an announcement by the state highway department. The work is already under way on a small scale, but will be expanded rapidly in June and July as traffic steps up to its summer peak.

The Minnesota survey is part of a national highway study being conducted by the United States Bureau of Public Roads in co-operation with state highway departments.

The first phase of the study to be initiated in the field is the weighing and classification of traffic loads at strategic points on the highways. Parties equipped with portable truck scales or loadometers, will handle this part of the work, analyzing traffic on the state, county and township roads.

Other phases of the study will include a comprehensive inventory showing the condition of rural roads both on and off the state system, a study of the use and traffic importance of specific roads and of general road financing problems.

The purpose of the survey is to provide data for long-term planning of road programs so that the public will obtain the maximum of highway service at a minimum of cost, according to N. W. Elsberg, state highway commissioner.

Data developed in this survey will supplement the findings of the economic road study made in Minnesota in 1934 under the supervision of the United States Bureau of Public Roads. Forty states are now working with the federal bureau in its planning project.

FISH STAY AT HOME—SO DO ICELAND OLYMPIC ATHLETES

Reykaavik, Iceland (YNS) Lucrative trade advantages offered by Germany failed to move the worlds oldest democracy in its determination not to participate in the Berlin Olympics. Iceland, whose prosperity depends in no small measure upon the sale of fresh fish, turned down a German offer to import forty thousand marks' worth of fish over the established quota if Iceland would participate in the Olympics.

TOLEDO UNIVERSITY SEEKS TO BAR PEACE STRIKERS AS "REDS"

Toledo, Ohio (YNS) Student anti-war strikers are redder than the rose.

So apparently think the business men board of trustees of Toledo University, and from all indications they're going to put their theories into action. If they do, large numbers of progressive students and faculty members will no longer be able to claim the university as their alma mater.

Though the student strike against war, run on a nationwide scale April 22, brought widespread support to the strikers at Toledo from faculty members, city liberals and the Toledo Central Labor Union, the trustees saw the affair through bright red glasses.

At their first meeting following the peace walkout, the trustees termed it "communistic" and demanded that all "communist, radical and unAmerican" activity be stopped on the campus by a purge of those holding views contrary to the trustees' ideas of propriety All university organizations have been asked to submit their constitutions to university officials for approval, and students and professors suspected of radical activity will be "disciplined", the trustees decided.

Faculty members at Toledo University are overworked and underpaid, liberals in their number assert, and any action to drop sympathizers with the peace movement from the payroll may lead to the speedy formation of a teachers' union local at the school.

AN EXPENSIVE PLAYHOUSE

The enclosed skating rink is taking form, and it must be said that it will be a splendid building, which we are sure will be a source of pride to the city and a place for healthful recreation for the young people of this community.

However, we wonder if the people of Thief River Falls would have Oked the $15,000 bond issue so readily if they could have forseen the total cost of the structure. Up to the present time the federal government has contributed over $25,000 which added to the city's $15,000 is a total of $40,000. And the end is probably not yet. To say the least, it is a lot of money to spend for a playhouse for a city that dumps its sewage in the back yard and taps its water supply from a swimming pool.

The building needs no defense. It speaks for itself and is a fine structure. But we can not refrain from pointing out that $40,000 to $50,000 would have built a sewage disposal plant and assured the city of a first class water supply system. And thee things we might add, are more essential to the city's health and well-being than a nice, big enclosed skating rink, worthy as that enterprise may be.

THE MISLEADER PUTS LABOR ON THE SPOT

The farmers of the Middle West have for years joined hands with organized labor on the political and economic front, and it must be said to the credit of organized labor that the rank and file have supported the farmers in their demands for economic and social justice.

When therefore, the executive of the American Federation of Labor goes out of his way to oppose the Frazier-Lemke Bill, a measure which has had the unqualified approval of every farm organization in the Middle West and in addition thereto, has the backing of state legislatures thruout the Valley, it is a blow as unexpected as it was uncalled for and unjustified. In bowing to the wishes of the International Bankers and the money trust, William Green has shook the cordial feeling which has existed between the organized farmers and organized labor to its foundation. It has apparently justified the suspicion many times voiced by leading liberals that the national leadership of the A. F. of L. rests in the hands of professional swivel chair artists and labor misleaders.

William Green has placed the American Federation of Labor in an unenviable "spot" from which it can only be extricated purging itself of leadership that betrays labor and sells out the farmers of the nation. It's Labor's move and the farmers are awaiting its decision.

THE FABLE OF THE COMPASSIONATE ONE

Once upon a time there was a very compassionate man who loved his fellows and was always among the first to come to the aid of suffering mankind.

And it came to pass that this Compassionate One went on a long journey that took him over the desert sands thru the mountains and along the shore of the mighty sea.

And when he was crossing the desert he came upon a poor unfortunate mortal who had started the long hot trek without a sufficient supply of water in his canteen and being overcome was stretched out upon the sand and was dying of thirst. But the Compassionate One hastily pulled forth his canteen which was well filled with cool, refreshing water and lifting the unfortunate one's head he did pour the life-giving fluid between his lips and bathed his face and worked over him until he brought him back to life and strength and sent him on his way, his canteen replenished with water from the supply of his deliverer.

Then did the Compassionate One continue on his way and verily he did wonder at the power and life contained in water so graciously provided by a wise creator.

But, Lo, he had but gone a short distance until he came upon another unfortunate victim who was prostrated by sunstroke and would surely have passed beyond to his fathers had not the Compassionate One come upon him to give aid and succor. And he worked diligently pouring water on the unfortunate victim's head and bathing his face and pouring drops of water sparingly between his lips. And in due time the Sunstroked One came around and regained his senses and was refreshed and recuperate and able to continue on his way.

Then did the Compassionate One refill his canteen at the nearest well, and he continued on his journey loudly singing paens of praise for the water that so miraculously cured men who were dying of thirst and suffering from sunstroke.

And even as he was singing he came to the shores of the great sea where turbulent waves were lashing the shore. And Lo, stretched out upon the sand of the beach he came upon a third victim of circumstance who was dying. This poor man was a sailor who had been shipwrecked and being exhausted in attempting to reach the shore by swimming, had gone down for the third time just as the angry waves tossed him up on the sands. Then did the Compassionate One see the necessity for quick and decisive action if the life of the drowned one was to be saved.

Calling upon all the experience and resource that he had gained in saving the lives of other victims of misfortune that he had saved from death, the Compassionate One laid the drowned one carefully with his head high upon the beach, and grasping a large pail that lay upon the sand he carried water from the angry sea and poured it over the head and face of the drowned one. For the Compassionate One was a Republican and he thought that water like Rugged Individualism is a cure for every depression.

PLAIN BUNK
(The St. Paul Daily News)

Minnesota newspaper men are no doubt amazed at the resolution adopted by the American Newspaper Publishers' association in New York charging that a "politico-gangster alliance" of state officials seeks to gag the press here.

Offered by Col. Robert R. McCormick, ultra-conservative publisher of the Chicago Tribune, the resolutions offer a broad indictment which is not supported by any facts which have as yet come to light.

The condemnation, apparently, is based upon the murder of two men who published weeklies of a questionable nature—highly sensational, given to demagogic overstatement with supporting facts and at times downright scandalous.

There is, of course, no excuse for the murder of these men. That crime is still unsolved and is a challenge to Minnesota law authorities from state down to the lowest county officials.

But it certainly is taking in a lot of ground to charge that the responsible and legitimate press of this state is being gagged by "politico-gangsters." Certainly The Daily News for one has never had any such experience and it has warred relentlessly on gangsters and politicians who condoned their activities.

Nor, to our knowledge, has any other publication of importance been subjected to a censorship such as merits the castigation delivered by the publishers in their hastily adopted resolutions.

Nothing ever came out of the Liggett case to prove any of the allegations which were so glibly set forth. There has never come to light the evidence upon which his published charges were based, despite many assertions that it was safely locked up somewhere.

Minnesota is being unjustly maligned by these solemn publishers who do not take sufficient trouble to investigate a situation before reaching erroneous conclusions. The Liggett case has been made a means of casting disrepute upon the entire commonwealth. People in the rest of the nation believe that editors are shot almost daily. In the words of the street all this is plain hooey.

LET'S BE "HONEST" AND "FAIR"
The Progressive

The big boys had a dinner in New York the other evening, gave each other medals, and told each other what great guys they were and how kind they were to their fellow men.

Owen D. Young, industrialist, whose labor record tells its own story, handed J. P. Morgan, the benevolent, peace loving international banker, a gold medal for "distinguished services rendered to humanity."

As a maxim for his admirers, Morgan said: "Do your work; be honest; keep your word; help when you can; be fair."

Beautiful sentiments, these, and they serve to recall Morgan's "help when you can" attitude in not paying any federal income tax in the United States for the years 1930, 1931, 1932, although he paid a substantial tax in England. Perhaps what Mr. Morgan meant was "help yourself when you can."

Then there is Mr. Morgan's war record, the huge profits he made representing the Allies in this country before our entrance into the World war, and the pressure put on the United States to get us into the war to protect the Morgan loans abroad.

"Distinguished service", indeed, by Mr. Morgan was revealed by the Nye munitions investigating committee. Distinguished service to the international bankers and war profiteers.

Mr. Morgan said, as he took his gold medal:

"I find it diffieut to understand the reasons why you decided to give me this great honor."

So do we.

WORLD'S GREATEST BLUFFERS
(Minneapolis Star)

Walter Millis, who knows a good deal about war and what its causes and results are, made one significant statement while in Minneapolis.

He said that "dictatorship will be the first to go in case war breaks out. Hitler doesn't want war although he will come as close to actual hostilities as he can."

In other words, dictators are the greatest of all bluffers. They keep their countries as close to war hysteria as they safely can, for war hysteria is an opium that dulls the people's senses to economic distress. If the dictators over-play their hand, war comes and they topple in the internal chaos that ensues. If they don't play it hard enough, economic strain will cause mass discontent leading to the same fate. It's merely a method of fooling the people as long as possible, and balancing popular unrest with the pomp and excitement of war.

UNDER THE EAGLE'S WING
(The National Voice)

It hardly seems believable that after educating the people on the evil effects of alcohol for the last hundred years, and passing laws against traffic, dating as far back as 1642, that the government would finally take this monster under its wing, and give it official sanction and protection.

Horace Greeley said: "To sell drink for a livelihood is bad enough, but for a whole community to share the responsibility and guilt of such a traffic seems a worse bargain than that of Eve and Judas."

Canon Wilberforce asks: "If Judas had received $10,000 instead of 30 pieces of silver, would that have justified his conduct?" There is no right way to do a wrong thing.

WAR A PLAGUE
(Union Advocate)

My first wish is to see this plague to mankind banished from the earth and the sons and daughters of this world employed in more pleasing and innocent amusements than in preparing implements and exercising them for the destruction of mankind.—George Washington on war.

What Is Production For Use?

By Alfred M. Bingham

Production-For-Use is becoming a fighting phrase in many parts of America. The third party movement is more and more clearly setting this slogan up against Production-for-profit as expressing the supreme issue of the modern era.

Production-for-use is seen as the answer to the challenge of poverty amidst plenty, as synonymous with an Economy of Abundance. And rightly so. For the break-down of the capitalist system of production-for-profit is precisely in its failure to make plenty available. We all know that there is potential plenty—of almost all material goods, foodstuffs, clothing materials, natural and industrial resources, as well as the intangible services like medical care that depend on trained personnel. And we all know that our present system holds back the plenty that might be produced, restricts production, till in almost every field it is more profitable not to produce at capacity than to produce. In fact one may truly speak of the issue as between production-for-use and non-production-for-profit.

Yet in our growing awareness of the need for using our wealth-producing plant for the benefit of all, which we loosely term production-for-use, the idea has remained very vague. How does one "produce-for-use?" Is not all production ultimately "for use", even though the immediate objective may be profit? No business man produces goods he does not hope will be sold and used. And what are the implications of production-for-use?

What we are concerned with here is an understanding of the basic principles of production-for-use, as an economic system, whether applied wholesale or in part, and particularly we are concerned to discover how such a system may release the potential plenty now locked behind the bars of profit.

Examples of Production for Use

We may get a closer understanding of the nature of production-for-use and its various forms by studying situations where production-for-use has been or is applied.

The primitive pioneer family produced almost everything it needed. Clearing and plowing the land, growing a variety of crops to provide foodstuffs and raw materials, raising animals for food and clothing, making tallow candles, spinning and weaving cloth, the early American settlers provided for their own welfare without dependence on money or the market except for a few articles of necessity or luxury. They produced directly for their own use as a family. But here production-for-use was not synonymous with plenty, rather with scarcity; for there were neither power machines nor extensive division of labor, which now permit an economy of abundance.

A simpler analogy may indicate how even then plenty could be enjoyed when it was available. After a good harvest the settlers had a Thanksgiving feast. The feast was an example of abundant production-for-use. The rich and varied foodstuffs were prepared, cooked and served, and every member of the family could take all he wanted of everything placed on the "groaning board," within the limits of the human stomach. There was no question of price or profit or maldistribution or poor or rich. All alike had plenty.

Every family meal where poverty has not forced scrimping and saving on food, follows the same pattern. There is an ample supply placed on the family table, and all are free to take all they want. The dinner has been produced for use, not for profit.

We may distinguish between goods made available for use and services made available for use. (Production-for-use is a slightly inaccurate term because services, strictly speaking, are not "produced", and also because the whole distributive process by which goods are made available is an essential part of the concept.) Free education, for instance, provides both school buildings, including equipment, and teaching services. Education is such an essential community task that it was long ago taken out of private hands and the profit motive, and in most civilized communities made free to all. Of course, the community pays for it, out of taxes or otherwise. Society does not often get something for nothing. But here both goods (school houses and equipment) and services (a trained teaching staff) are provided for the public benefit. This is an example of production-for-use, without direct money payment by the consumer being required.

Most present examples of production-for-use are of this type, no payment being required. So highways, parks, playgrounds, sewage systems, police and fire protection, national defense, involve the free provision of goods and services abundant for our needs, with the community itself usually footing the bill.

Another type of production-for-use makes goods or services available at a price sufficient to pay the cost. So the postal system takes care of carrying the mails at a price—very cheap but nevertheless sufficient to pay for the service and equipment with little or no deficit. In certain communities likewise there are publicly-owned enterprises to provide electric power, or street transportation, or water, or other services, but in each case on payment of a price to cover the cost.

In most of these cases the community, whether local, state, or national, undertakes to provide for its people what private enterprise cannot be expected to do as well. There is one further type of production-for-use, where a group of individuals join in a cooperative to provide themselves with some common benefits without thought of individual profit. In this country cooperatives have been chiefly concerned with retailing goods to consumers, or with marketing, and in the great majority of cases the articles are produced by private enterprise But increasingly in the cooperative movement there is a tendency to go back to the productive process itself and to apply the production-for-use principle not merely at the distributive end but all the way through.

From these examples the simple idea back of production-for-use is apparent. Whether concerned with material goods like articles of clothing or buildings, or with services like teaching or retailing, and whether making the goods and services available with payment or without payment, the principle is the same, service of human needs directly rather than because it is profitable for any individual in pursuit of his own gain.

Minute Sermon

By Dr. Crawford Grays

Hell news from Ethiopia:

The Associated Press foreign staff accompanying a squadron of Italian planes on a bombing flight, ecstatically reports: "Our plane wheeled, dove and thundered at them less than 600 feet from the ground, so close we could see the black men sawing desperately at the reins of their mules. Then Francesco started pulling levers. We dropped twenty-four, fifty-one-pounders in clusters, and I saw at least ten strike squarely in the middle of frantic groups......shattered bodies were easily visible flying through the air."

......Haile Selassie reported: "We have no protection against this cruel gas, no masks, nothing. This is suffering torture beyond description. Hundreds of my countrymen are screaming in pain, many of them unrecognizable because the skin is burned off their faces." And no outspoken denunciation from the vicar of Christ in Rome. All of which must be highly pleasing to Arthur Brisbane.

The Washington Commentator

By E. C. Stengelsen

And after the Bonus—Pensions!

In the glamorous war days of 1917 and 1918, there was one small angle of the then current fracas which the war enthusiasts quite overlooked. It is neatly summed up in the old adage. . .

"If you want music, you must expect to pay the fiddler!"

* * * *

The Nation demanded 'fiddling'. And it got service! There is a certain, bewhiskered old woodsawer at Doorn, in Holland, who can, if he wishes, testify to the effectiveness of the American music

* * * *

But while 4 million American youths were earning 30 bucks per month, turning the Germans from their ways of wickedness, the civilians were waxing fat on the country's hectic prosperity. . .

Though this column hastens to say that it was doubtless an entirely fair division, taking it all in all. For everybody got something out of it. The stay-at-homes got the cash, the safety and the good jobs, while the doughboys got the glory and the cooties—and got shot.

126,000 of them died in the service, and 182,000 were wounded.

Regrettably, however, the soldiers, when they returned, did not take your commentator's just and sensible view of the affair. They were quite too unpatriotic and avaricious to understand that 'making the world safe for democracy' was not only a sacred duty, but a privilege.

It was quite impossible to make them see that they alone owed the patriotic duty of sacrifice, while the other 115 million of us went about our profitable chores at home, safe and snug, and put money in the bank.

In short, they demanded a bonus, and were tactless enough to remind the populace of certain extravagant promises which had been made to them when they left for war.

We remonstrated with them, of course, in a serious and kindly manner . . . pointed out to them that patriotism and cash were as far apart as a dachshund's nose and tail But to no avail.

* * * *

We tried firmness . . . or at least, Hoover and Pat Hurley did. Herbert and Pat, it will be remembered, caused a bunch of bonus-marchers to be machine-gunned and bayonetted.

But the unpatriotic clamor continued. And finally, this year, it ended with passage of the bonus act.

The war zealots of 1917 and 1918 are urged to look back upon their work and consider whether it was good. . .

In the first place, did the war effectively remove the menace of the 'Hun'?

Alas! we fear not. Even the most casual observer of present-day world conditions must conclude that as a disturbing element, Hitler is as great a danger as was the kaiser.

Indeed, the difference between the Germany of Junker days and the Germany of today seems to be largely a matter of mustachios . . the kaiser's pointed upward, whereas Hitler's points downward.

* * * *

It was a war to end war. But the fact is that right now the dove of peace hasn't enough tail feathers left to steer itself in still weather.

The human cost of the war, and its aftermath, is beyond estimation. It may not be expressed in figures. As to the monetary cost, however, one may be a little more definite. One figure fixes it at 18 billions for America alone. It is as good as any.

* * * *

One may be pardoned for being cynical enough to see no other benefits from the war than the fortunes made by a small group of international bankers, munition makers and profiteers.

But if we believe that upon payment of the bonus, we may draw a vast sigh of relief that we have rid ourselves, at last, of the final item in the war's dreary account, we are due for a disillusionment.

For however sincere the veterans and their organizations may be in their assurances that nothing further will be asked, no one who has given the subject even the most casual study believes that general pensions will not eventually come.

* * * *

The opening gun has already been fired. The National Magazine, a Washington publication which has championed the cause of ex-service men for the last 60 years, and has taken a prominent part in bringing about pension legislation for veterans of other wars, invites the cooperation of World War veterans in starting agitation for a general pension.

That the war frenzy is a costly emotion may be seen from the following table, which shows the number of veterans, or dependents, who were paid a pension, during 1935, by the United States:

War of 1812	4
Mexican War	294
Indian Wars	9,115
Civil War	113,563
Spanish-American War	203,547

* * * *

Eventually the World War veterans or their dependents will be added to the foregoing The total in dollars will be staggering.

It proves the utter futility and folly of urging that the soldiers who fought the war but had little part in making it are going to permit themselves to be singled out for sacrifice.

Lead Us Not Into Slavery

By Raymond S. Hofses, Editor
Reading Labor Advocate

WHEN LABOR LEADERS of the type of David Dubinsky and Emil Rieve leave the Socialist party to cast their lots with Franklin D. Roosevelt and to lead their followers into the "New Deal" camp, there is a reason. SO, TOO, is there a reason when a man deserts his wife to enter into an alliance with a dissolute woman But, reasons can be present while justification is missing. So with Dubinski and Rieve, and with other leaders of labor groups who, understanding the economics of Socialism, have supported or are about to support the nation's foremost defender of the private profit system.

THOSE WHO FLEE to the "New Deal" do more than desert their comrades and their party. More important is the inescapable fact that they have turned their backs upon their principles; and that is the unpardonable sin.

PERHAPS TIME will reveal something in the Roosevelt policies and purposes to bring to his Socialist supporters the justification which is missing today. But the past and the present offer nothing to explain their actions, either in terms of intellectual honor or of class loyalty.

IS THE PRICE of a Socialist leader of labor so low that he can be purchased for an abortive gesture at a planned economy which had no other motive than the preservation of a system against which Socialists have always stood? Have the economic principles of production for use been championed by weaklings who can be seduced by proffers of an economy of planned scarcity?

IS THE DESIRE for freedom and justice so small a part of humanity's aspirations that leaders of labor in the world's richest nation can be bought by relief policies which, after more than three years offer millions of workers nothing more than a choice between slavery in the service of profiteers and pauperism under government auspices?

I DON'T KNOW what Socialists, understanding the class character of society, hope to gain by turning to Roosevelt. But as I ponder upon the defection of Dubinsky and Rieve I recall a story which told how hungry Spanish soldiers permitted themselves to be captured by American forces because there was more to eat in American prisons than in the camps to which those soldiers had been assigned.

AND I BECOME SUSPICIOUS. Can it be that Socialist leaders can unlearn what they have always known? Can it be that these new followers of the American fuehrer actually believe that they are leading their followers to a better land? Or are they betraying those who trusted them into a new slavery that they may feed at the trough of a master?

—O—

Heywood Broun, Striker

The American Newspapermen's Guild, under the able leadership of Heywood Broun, has often showed the stuff of which it is made, and is now showing Hearst newspapers—especially in Milwaukee—how class-conscious a newspaperman can really get. Broun is leading the struggle there personally.

The strike against Hearst newspapers is a strike not only against low wages and long hours, but against growing fascism in America. Broun, an old Socialist, is one of the latest converts to the national Farmer-Labor party movement. Convinced that the working class cannot be served against the old reactionary parties by any existing radical group, he sees united FRONT as the only solution. A Farmer-Labor party on a national scale, which would enlist the support of all progressive and radical forces, is the only hope for staying fascism in the USA, in Heywood Broun's opinion.

Heywood Broun, striker, is only one among the legions joining the new movement for coalition; and prospects are encouraging.

—O—

The Chicago Conference

The Minnesota Farmer-Labor party has constituted itself the spearhead of the new movement by sponsoring a conference to meet in Chicago the end of this month. This meeting will not be a delegated affair, but will be composed of carefully selected leaders of all sects and denominations of progressive and radical groups, who will meet with the express purpose of coming to some understanding about the third-party movement.

It is very encouraging that the Minnesota group should do this. It shows a certain responsibility, and an aliveness to the situation The Minnesota Farmer-Labor group is perhaps the only group in the country who could call a broad united-front conference like this and achieve any results.

This column has often stressed the importance of supporting a Farmer-Labor party on a national scale. It should follow as a matter of course that our state Farmer-Labor party should also be supported; but this fact might be lost sight of in the heat of a presidential election, as a few far-sighted individuals have pointed out. It need not be necessary to say emphatically that the Farmer-Labor program in Minnesota should be supported all along the line, because it is evident that it is the only progressive program being offered in this state. All other lines lead to fascism and black reaction.

It is generally believed that the Chicago Conference will endorse the idea of supporting the national Farmer-Labor movement without entering a presidential candidate in the field, and will concentrate on electing congressmen only. There are some arguments for this, but the present writer—one among many—thinks that to fail to run a presidential ticket is a mistake. That, after all, is the engrossing IDEA—to elect a president.

No one believes that the third-party movement can possibly elect a presidential candidate this year; but without such a candidate, where would you get unity in such a movement?

This, and other questions, the Chicago Conference will grapple with.

—O—

The Perpetual Problem

And now that the world knows William Green helped defeat the Frazier-Lemke Farm Loan Bill, they say, "How can you ever expect to reconcile farmers and laborers in ANY movement." The answer is simple—get rid of labor fakers like William Green. Green is symbolical of bureaucracy, the great boogerman of modern times.

1. Stop bootlegging.
2. Reduce the amount of drinking.

BUT THEY WERE MISTAKEN

"Bootleggers are still selling 50 percent of the alcoholic beverages consumed in this country today."

—Joseph Triner, Chairman of National Code Authority for the Alcoholic Beverage Wholesale Industry (Evening Star, Washington D. C., Nov. 26, 1934).

"Instead of being put out of business by repeal, the bootlegging industry is bigger and better than it ever was during prohibition . . . Nine-tenths of the saloons and restaurants that are handling liquor today are selling bootleg stuff".

—Former proprietor of a New York tavern, quoted in The New York Herald-Tribune, Nov. 28, 1934.

More than 400,000 liquor sellers at present hold Federal Tax receipts, as compared with 177,000 before 1920.

FARMER-LABOR PRESS SERVICE

"A national Farmer Labor party must be launched in 1936 rather than in 1940 is the decision of our national committee headed by Congressman Thomas R. Amlie of Wisconsin at its recent meeting in Washington, D. C.," declares Howard Y. Williams, national organizer of the Farmer Labor Political Federation who has just returned to St. Paul from the meeting of the national committee and a months organizing and speaking trip in eastern states.

"We believe that the policies of President Roosevelt will fail in the period of 1936-40 We must have a well organized Farmer Labor party on the national scene by 1940 to prevent black Republicanism from coming into power in 1940. That would mean fascism for the Republicans would fail as completely as the Democrats are going to fail, because neither party has any program beyond liniment and bandages for the dying profit system. Only a new party committed to production for use rather than profit, the economy of abundance rather than scarcity, national social planning in place of rank competition and the gearing up of farms and factories to full production can meet this crisis. We must organize in the states and strike for victory in 1936.

"After an interview with Senator Gerald P. Nye of North Dakota I am quite confident that he would accept the nomination for presidency if he were drafted by a representative new party convention. Congressmen Thomas R. Amlie of Wisconsin and Ernest Lundeen of Minnesota are possibilities for vice presidential candidates.

"The Farmer Labor party of Minnesota and the Progressive party of Wisconsin would take the lead in the calling of the national convention. Interviews with Norman Thomas and Louis Waldman of the Socialist party and other progressive leaders convince me that they would welcome such a move and cooperate fully in the campaign.

"We now plan the national convention for late June or early July. We believe that at least seven of the nine Congressmen in Minnesota can be elected on the Farmer Labor ticket and probably the full nine. With the two Senators that will give us a delegation of ten or eleven. In Wisconsin we can elect at least nine, and probably the full ten Congressmen on the third party ticket which with the Senator will give us ten or eleven there. We are convinced that we can increase the number over the country to at least thirty Congressmen. If the Guffey Coal bill, the Wagner Labor Relations bill and the Social Security bill are declared unconstitutional and the administration makes no determined fight for a Workers' Rights Amendment to the Constitution we may run the number up to seventy five congressmen and in an even race between the Republicans and Democrats, hold the balance of power in the next Congress

"Minnesota, Wisconsin, Oregon, Washington, Oklahoma, at least 750,000 votes in California, are the states that should be carried in 1936 for the new party. Anything can happen by next November. We may win in 1936 and will certainly win in 1940.

"The rapid growth of sentiment for a new national party in the middle west and far west indicates that President Roosevelt can expect little or no support from liberals and radicals in those areas in the next election.

"In Oklahoma our Federation has won the indorsement of the powerful Veterans of Industry, representing 200 000 voters, and has the pledge of that group to independent political action in that state. Similar developments are constantly taking place throughout the country.

"The significance of this revolt against Roosevelt is that the people are demanding something more than the scarcity system which the present administration has attempted to preserve. They are demanding the right to a standard of living equal to the productive capacity of the country, and are unwilling to continue to support the organized sabotage of our productive efficiency."

Mr. Williams reports most encouraging meetings and conferences in the East with state parties in process of organization in Massachusetts, Vermont, New York, West Virginia, New Jersey, Connecticut, and Kentucky.

ODD DEVICE PUTS LINE OUT OF ORDER

Marshall— Telephone "trouble-shooters" found a queer one between Marshall and Minneota the other day. When three lines were frequently out of order for nearly a week, and all the usual tests had failed to locate the difficulty, the Marshall office of that telephone company sent out a trouble crew with instructions to go over every foot of the line if necessary. A mile from Minneota they met with success—a piece of wire two or three feet long was hanging over the telephone lines, at either end of which there was tied a pocket gopher. It is believed that some youth had been snaring gophers, then decided to try his hand with a bowlas similar to those used by Indians in the olden days to bring down buffalo.

"We believe that the policies of President Roosevelt will fail in the period of 1936-40. We must have a well organized Farmer Labor party on the national scene by 1940 to prevent black Republicanism from coming into power in 1940. That would mean fascism for the Republicans would fail as completely as the Democrats are going to fail, because neither party has any program beyond liniment and bandages for the dying profit system. Only a new party committed to production for use rather than profit, the economy of abundance rather than scarcity, national social planning in place of rank competition and the gearing up of farms and factories to full production can meet this crisis. We must organize in the states and strike for victory in 1936.

"After an interview with Senator Gerald P. Nye of North Dakota I am quite confident that he would accept the nomination for presidency if he were drafted by a representative new party convention. Congressmen Thomas R. Amlie of Wisconsin and Ernest Lundeen of Minnesota are possibilities for vice presidential candidates.

"The Farmer Labor party of Minnesota and the Progressive party of Wisconsin would take the lead in the calling of the national convention. Interviews with Norman Thomas and Louis Waldman of the Socialist party and other progressive leaders convince me that they would welcome such a move and cooperate fully in the campaign.

"We now plan the national convention for late June or early July. We believe that at least seven of the nine Congressmen in Minnesota can be elected on the Farmer Labor ticket and probably the full nine. With the two Senators that will give us a delegation of ten or eleven. In Wisconsin we can elect at least nine, and probably the full ten Congressmen on the third party ticket which with the Senator will give us ten or eleven there. We are convinced that we can increase the number over the country to at least thirty Congressmen. If the Guffey Coal bill, the Wagner Labor Relations bill and the Social Security bill are declared unconstitutional and the administration makes no determined fight for a Workers' Rights Amendment to the Constitution we may run the number up to seventy five congressmen and in an even race between the Republicans and Democrats, hold the balance of power in the next Congress

"Minnesota, Wisconsin, Oregon, Washington, Oklahoma, at least 750,000 votes in California, are the states that should be carried in 1936 for the new party. Anything can happen by next November. We may win in 1936 and will certainly win in 1940.

"The rapid growth of sentiment for a new national party in the middle west and far west indicates that President Roosevelt can expect little or no support from liberals and radicals in those areas in the next election.

"In Oklahoma our Federation has won the indorsement of the powerful Veterans of Industry, representing 200 000 voters, and has the pledge of that group to independent political action in that state. Similar developments are constantly taking place throughout the country.

"The significance of this revolt against Roosevelt is that the people are demanding something more than the scarcity system which the present administration has attempted to preserve. They are demanding the right to a standard of living equal to the productive capacity of the country, and are unwilling to continue to support the organized sabotage of our productive efficiency."

Mr. Williams reports most encouraging meetings and conferences in the East with state parties in process of organization in Massachusetts, Vermont, New York, West Virginia, New Jersey, Connecticut, and Kentucky.

ODD DEVICE PUTS LINE OUT OF ORDER

Marshall— Telephone "troubleshooters" found a queer one between Marshall and Minneota the other day. When three lines were frequently out of order for nearly a week, and all the usual tests had failed to locate the difficulty, the Marshall office of that telephone company sent out a trouble crew with instructions to go over every foot of the line if necessary. A mile from Minneota they met with success—a piece of wire two or three feet long was hanging over the telephone lines, at either end of which there was tied a pocket gopher. It is believed that some youth had been snaring gophers, then decided to try his hand with a bowlas similar to those used by Indians in the olden days to bring down buffalo.

Council

It was suggested that power users would still use a separate meter, and the rate for power was suggested as follows: A—first 300 kilowatts 5 cents; B—2nd 300 kilowatts, 4 cents; C—3rd 300 kilowatts, 3 cents and all over at 2 1-2 cents per kilowatt.

The council discussed the proposed structure with the committee and laid the proposition on the table for further consideration It was stated that the council will possibly also work out a proposed structure and that a public hearing may be held before any action revising the rates is taken.

The council entered contract for 150 two way street signs to be erected at downtown and other intersections. These are to be enameled steel signs and were purchased at $2.65 each. Those at downtown intersections will be bracketed on the white way posts.

A building permit requested by Fred Forsberg and laid on the table last meeting was taken up when Mr. Forsberg appeared before the council and explained the fact that the proposed structure is to be used as a garage. The permit was issued. The city clerk was instructed to issue dry cleaning license to Dorothy Erickson when she submits a state license. The application was laid on the table at the last meeting on request of John Narverud who stated that Miss Erickson could not comply with state license requirements. Pool hall licenses were renewed on applications of William Sheedy and Harry Fry.

Poppy Day, this Saturday, May 23rd. The manufacture of each paper poppy enabled a disabled service man to earn one cent. Every cent of the money derived from the sale of poppies is used for disabled or needy veterans or their families. The poppy is to be worn on Memorial Day as a mark of respect to our departed service men and as a symbol of the sacrifices of men who died in the service of their country.

Attractive Poppy Posters have been made by the school children and are on display in the store windows. Appropriate prizes are being awarded by the Auxiliary for the prize posters.

Regular meeting of the Auxiliary this Thursday evening. Delegates to the District Convention at Fergus Falls, June 13, 14 and 15 will be elected at this meeting Be there.

PULLS UP 29 FISH IN SINGLE CAST!

Worthington—At least one of the fishermen who beseiged Okabena for bullheads a week ago was astounded by his luck. He caught 20 bullheads, 3 carp, 3 crappies, and 3 pike in one cast! When his line snagged in some wire he pulled to the surface an elaborate fish trap that had been planted near a culvert under a grade. The catch caused quite a sensation along the waterfront. The game fish were returned to the lake and the trap destroyed. Fish traps in any form are illegal, and the person who planted the trap is subject to arrest and a heavy fine.

Sports Snorts

With a few pithy pertinent phrases, Bill Tilden says the best our Davis Cup hopefuls can look forward to is the worst of it. He doubts, yea, in fact he even disbelieves, that our sturdy stalwarts can or will reach the semi-finals. Why, queried the scurrilous scribes, this drear and dismal outlook? Big Bill proceeded to paint the pathetic picture in several more or less well chosen words. First: England, Germany, and Australia have better teams than our country has. This seemed, even to the witless wordsters, a cogent reason for our anticipated collapse. Second: (said Bill)—All our tennis greats, potential or actual, (Vines, Shields, Stoefen, etc.), have turned professional. The underpaid minions of the press politely jotted down these tearful tidings And laughed out loud. So! The boys, derisively called tennis bums, had finally arisen in their mighty wrath, told the Lawn Tennis Association where to get off, and were now shoveling in the shekels on their various tours of the hinterlands! As the saying goes, our tears were crocodilian. Now let the former high-handed and almighty U.S.L.T.A. whistle in the dark and forlornly pray for another Davis Cup contender. Er, by the way, Big Bill mirthfully howled louder than all the rest. . .

Cerebro Spinal meningitis, a disease even more fearsome than it sounds, has forcibly and forever, relegated Bruce Campbell to the sidelines. The hard hitting Indian outfielder, a fielding flash and a .333 pill pounder, is only 26. Sober minded medicos have advised that the likeable Scot retire, and seek out some less strenuous way of making a living Manager Buck O'Neill, sorrowful on several counts, has sadly urged Bruce to quit. In all likelihood he will. We hope, and think, that Campbell will carve out a career in some as yet unknown field as successful as his too short baseball life has been.

DIAMOND DIDOES— Joe Di Maggio, after a ballyhoo that would do credit to a Garbo, or even a Queen Marie of Rumania, finally broke into the Yankee line-up and amazingly, lived up to all the nice things said about him. He garnered three blows in six tries, and gobbled up anything that came his way in the outfield. Viva Di Maggio! . . . The Braves are playing splendidly—thus far. Benge, a Brooklyn castoff, has won four straight, without a loss as yet. The screwy Stengel can't laugh that one off! The injury jinx, after a complete and conspicuous absence for two years, has finally visited the Tigers—but how! Hank Greenburg, the slugging mainstay of the team, and best in the business for that matter, breaks his wrist and will be out for at least six weeks. That's not bad enough, though. The next day Cochrane, manager of two sucessive championship teams, and the best catcher in baseball, severely injures his leg. The date of his return is a great big question mark. Without these two greats in the line-up, the Tigers will have to battle for a first division berth. With them bin there, the team wouldn't have too much difficulty snaring their third pennant in a row. . . . The Giants show signs of staging their annual collapse early this year. Hubbell is doing his share, but even he is losing a few tough ones. The team just isn't hitting This writer can't see them higher than fourth in the current flag fight. . . . What's the matter with the St. Louis Browns? They aren't nearly as bad as their won and lost column indicate. Maybe Hornsby'll lift them a notch or two in the immediate future. . . . Any day now we can expect the sudden deflation of those blown up .450 batting averages. Imagine Frankie Crosetti hovering around that unbelievable figure! Grove has an earned run average of something like Point 250. The Lonaconing Lefty is only furnishing additional proof, if such is needed, that he is the greatest hurler of the past fifteen years.

The family was seated at the table with a guest, who was a business acquaintance of Dad's, all ready to enjoy the meal, when the five-year-old son blurted out: "Why, mother, this is roast beef!"

It Worked

Two men in a car went past the red light and were stopped by an officer.

"I'm sorry," said the driver, thinking quickly, "but I happen to be a doctor and I'm taking a patient to the asylum in a hurry."

The officer was suspicious and looked keenly at the passenger. But the latter also thought quickly. Looking up at the officer with a seraphic smile, he whispered: "Kiss me, sergeant!"

They got away with it.

"Not precisely," replied Senator Sorghum. "The candidate selects himself and then gets out and persuades the people to indorse him."

OLDEST COUNTY TAX RECEIPT SHOWS DEPRAVED CONDITION

Delano—Tax bills of today are not those of yesterday, as evidenced by a receipt brought in by E. A. Welker, Delano, dated 1858 and listing a total assessment of $3.85 for a 160 acre farm. The receipt which was issued the same year that Minnesota was admitted to the Union, is written in long hand on a slip of paper 1 1-4 inches wide and 7 3-4 inches long. It was issued to C. A. Wright, grandfather of Mr. Welker. On one side it reads as follows: C. A Wright: Your state, county, town and school tax is $3.85. On the reverse side it reads as follows: Received payment, James P. Lyle. The Wright family came to Minnesota in 1857 from Erie, Pennsylvania, part way by boat and part way by covered wagon. Their first stop was in Minneapolis, where Mrs. Welker's uncle owned and operated the only dry goods store. It took the family two days to drive from Minneapolis to Wright county. With a good imagination, it is not hard to conceive of Farmer Wright sitting down to tear his hair at the frightful tax bill. Think of it! A tax of $3.85 on a single farm! What does the government think we are, millionaires?

MICE EAT BARK BENEATH SNOW AROUND APPLE TREES

St. Cloud—With the early spring thaws and recedence of the snow came the discovery of a new winter menace to orchards near St. Cloud. Frank Jung, horticulturist, found that the bark of more than 20 of his prize apple trees on the grounds of his summer home had been stripped off around the base by mice, endangering the lives of the trees. Jung stated that the mice had cleaned all the bark off below the snow level and the grounds today were a regular "spider web" of tunnels and passages. With the majority of the trees stripped of approximately 10 inches of bark, destroying the circulation of the sap through the cambian layer, Jung expects to remedy the situation by grafting smaller limbs of each tree around the peeled areas. The grafted limbs will arch from underneath the bark on each side of the stripped space in the fashion of "handles". The only trees the mice seemed to favor were those around which grass had grown the previous season, and the younger trees standing in cultivated ground were untouched.

Willetts implied that he had been with the family some time. Why had he never seen the son? Or even a picture of him? Why did he take those trousers? "I'm trapped," mused the Duke.

"Or else he's no more a butler than I am Mr. Ridder. There's a lot of mighty valuable junk in this house."

It was with that thought in his mind that His Grace of Hollywood finally turned the other cheek on an Irish linen pillow slip, and dropped off to sleep.

The trousers were beside his bed when he awoke.

And all that cinema nonsense had evaporated from his mind.

He squared his shoulders, and sauntered down the carpeted stairs. Already, he felt a new dignity: a new, stiffening self-respect. The trousers were neatly pressed, and "Good morning, sir," said the butler, as he entered the breakfast room.

There was nothing "make shift" about the meal. Evans had been to town for cream, and bacon, and bread, and the Duke's courage rose with every sip of the steaming coffee.

"What's this?" he inquired, his eye falling upon an envelope at his plate.

"A letter for your mother, sir," Willetts replied. "Mrs. Ridder expected some mail from the employment agency, and places like that. She said you was to open it, sir."

Barry hesitated, then opened the envelope.

A hundred dollar bill dropped out.

"Well," echoed the Duke, with that new courage born of steaming coffee. "Well, and likewise good. I can use this."

"Yes, sir," said the butler. "A little more coffee, sir?"

"Thank you," assented the Duke. "And just one more piece of toast."

Alone in the cheerful breakfast room he read the letter.

> "Dear Mother:
> I'm returning the money. I can't keep it, and I can't go to Southampton. I'm sending this special delivery, so you'll have time to get rid of the servants, if you decide not to open the house. For your sake, I hope father improves at Bad Nauheim, but I don't want anything that comes from him, and I shan't write again. Thanks, all the same.
> John."

The Duke picked up the envelope again.

It had been posted the previous morning in New York, and there was no special delivery stamp.

Back with the toast and coffee, Willetts inquired, "Anything important, sir?"

"The letter?" asked the Duke, as though that had been farthest from his present thoughts. "No. I'll send it to Bad Nauheim when I write, and keep the money until my mother returns."

"What time shall you want the car?"

His Grace reflected. It was a long walk to Montauk Point. And, apparently, there was no possibility of overplaying his luck. Why should not he ride to Montauk in comfort—or, at least, to within a few miles of Montauk—and disappear there, instead of at Southampton?

"I might take a drive," he said.

Out of sight of the house, he took the precaution of burning that letter from "John." "I'll return that money from Montauk," mused the Duke. "I don't want to be hooked for robbing the mails."

This was certainly a beautiful place. "If it were mine—" And he grinned again. It was, for the moment.

Life had never been dull for him—or for his father. "Keep moving"—that was the old man's slogan. And that was all he ever kept. Barry's memories began in Pittsburg. Stranded, Francis Gilbert had tutored there. Barry had discovered that he should have a mother. The old man had never mentioned it, so his son raised the question. "I lost her," his father said.

"How?"

"In Algiers. You were born there."

It was years before Barry was old enough to put the two things together. "Did she die when I was born?" he asked then, and got no answer. This was in San Sebastian, where the old man worked for an engineering concern. Afterward, they pushed on to England. From there, it was Hong Kong, where Francis Gilbert came home one night with a fever, and died the next morning.

Barry had begged a clerkship in Hong Kong, and then worked his way to San Francisco. On the boat was a movie director. "You've got a great smile," he told the youngster. "I think I can use you." Hollywood, then. Youth, and looks, and the ingratiating grin helped a lot there. And Barry learned a lot, too. He was earning two hundred dollars a week, sometimes, when a wallet vanished from a coat thrown over a table "in the set." The Duke knew who took it. She was a poor little thing, though, and desperate, and His Grace kept his mouth shut. They couldn't pin it on him, he said, and they didn't, but there were no jobs after that.

And so he'd come East. Ankle-deep in the sand, that morning at Southampton, he kept thinking of the letter he'd just burned. And of his own mother. He had missed her all through his childhood, watching the other boys with their mothers.

At noon Evans brought the car.

"You want to get lunch, don't you?" the chauffeur asked.

"I want to see the end of the island. We can eat anywhere."

The Duke sank back into the cushioned seat. Along the highway they sped.

The car was slowing down now, and, looking ahead, His Grace saw another limousine drawn up at the side of the road. Evans threw out the clutch, and then put his foot on the brake.

A husky young fellow in uniform was standing in front of the other car. Beside him was a spare, white-haired gentleman. And, framed in the car's doorway, ready to alight, stood a pretty girl.

"Stop," said the Duke, quite supererogatorily, since they had stopped.

She was the prettiest girl he had ever seen, the Duke decided. Tall and slim and dark, dressed in an ensemble of hunter's-green tweed, with a top coat to match, and a tiny felt hat perched upon her sleek black hair. Her eyes were gray, the Duke was to discover later, and wide, and a little cold. Her lips were bright red against the pale ivory of her face.

"Can I do anything for you?" inquired the Duke.

He was standing before her now, and her glance took him in, calmly, appraisingly, before she answered, "No, thanks."

And with that, Barry felt, she erased him from the landscape.

"Yes, you can," said the white-haired gentleman. "That is, if either of you knows anything about a car. My chauffeur doesn't."

"We'll be glad to try," the Duke said, cordially. "Have a look at it, will you, Evans?"

"It's the ignition," the other chauffeur told him.

The two men began fussing with the engine.

"It's got to go," fumed the white-haired gentleman. "I haven't had a bite since breakfast, and I'm due in New York at five o'clock."

"Hungry myself," said the Duke. "Where did you mean to eat?"

"Twin Bays Golf Club," replied the gentleman. "It's only about three miles up this road."

"Well," the Duke suggested, "if you're in a hurry, why don't you let me take you there? Then Evans and I can come back, and have another try at this."

"That's very kind of you, but I've a better idea. You say you're hungry, too. Why don't you lunch with us, and leave your man to do the rest?"

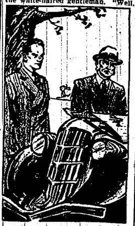
"Swell!" said the Duke. "Evans, drive us to the Twin Bays Golf Club, and then come back to this job."

Barry turned round to look for the girl in the green dress. She was whispering to Evans, the other side of the stalled car.

Then: "You're Mr. Ridder, aren't you?" the girl asked.

And before Barry could reply, she went on: "Your man told me. I thought I recognized the car."

"John Ridder's son!" exclaimed the white-haired gentleman. "Well, I am surprised! So you've made it up with your father, have you? You must have heard him speak of me. I'm Judge Hambidge."



"It's Got to Go," Fumed the White-Haired Gentleman.

"Not Judge Curtis Hambidge?" Barry said, omitting to add that he had seen the name in yesterday's newspaper.

"The same," replied the Judge. "Your father and I are—well, we've known each other since he came down to Southampton, three years ago. This is my daughter, Patricia. Pat, for short, though it takes courage to call her that."

He laughed.

Patricia looked straight ahead.

"Where is your father?"

"On his way to Bad Nauheim."

"That heart of his, eh? Well, I'm glad you two got together at last. It's been killing your mother. I suppose you're going to spend the season here, now."

"I don't know—yet," answered the Duke.

"Well, I would. This is your chance. Make good, and the old man'll be ashamed of himself when he comes back. Haven't got a job, anywhere, have you?"

"I had a job a few months ago," observed the Duke.

"What happened?"—with a disarming smile. "Did they want you to work?"

"You're being very rude, my dear," the Judge admonished. "The truth is that Patricia's rather fed-up on our young men. And she's heard a few pretty wild stories about you."

They had reached the club now.

"Get Judge Hambidge's car running," the Duke instructed Evans, "and then you and Bates get something to eat, and bring both cars back here."

A moment afterward, he was writing "John Clarke Ridder, Jr.," in the guest-book.

"Early yet," commented the Judge. "Southampton doesn't get going before the end of June. We're opening our house next week. How's your place? Still got Willetts?"

"Yes."

"Good servant, Willetts. How about a little salmon salad, Mr. Ridder?"

"Salmon salad—with mayonnaise, please."

He smiled, remembering yesterday's hot-dog at Huntington.

"Rather a coincidence, meeting you here," he said. "I'd just seen your name in The Globe."

The Judge's brow clouded.

"Yes. Your father's newspaper. They say I'm a Tammany judge, robbing the peepul."

"It's always easy to work up excitement about the under-dog," Patricia cut in. "As though it really mattered what happened to the underdog."

"You don't like rich men's sons," the Duke remarked, "and you don't like under-dogs. Just whom do you like, Miss Hambidge?"

"People who make their way."

"Can't you feel sorry for people who don't?"

"Not very," she admitted, frankly.

"I suppose you'll be keeping bachelor's hall most of the summer," suggested the Judge. "You'll have to make yourself at home with us. I'm a widower, and away a good part of the time, so you and Patricia can fight things out on the tennis court." He glanced at his watch. "We'll be down for good the first of next week. How about dining with us Thursday?"

"Please do," smiled the girl.

"I should be delighted," said the Duke.

"At eight? Don't dress. We wear flannels most of the time out here."

"Flannels it is," said the Duke.

Purring softly, as though nothing had ever been wrong with its vitals, the Judge's car drew up to the steps.

"Until Thursday, then, and thank you for the lift. I'm mighty glad to have met John Ridder's boy."

"I'm glad, too," added Patricia, giving him her hand. "Maybe I'll learn to like rich men's sons."

"Or under-dogs."

"That sounds a little more improbable," said the girl.

They drove away.

"Montauk Point?" Evans asked, holding open the car door.

"No," the Duke answered. "I've changed my mind about Montauk Point. Some other day. I think we'll go home now."

BIRDS QUALIFY PASTOR AS SAFE, CAREFUL DRIVER

Isle—When a garage mechanic lifted the hood of Pastor Willard Vetter's travel-worn sedan to squirt a drop of oil here and there he found tangible evidence that the minister must be a careful and safe driver. At the rear of the motor, carefully entwined among the curves of the exhaust pipe, was a perfectly appointed sparrow's nest ready for occupancy. During some period when the car was idle, unknown to the owner, the birds had come through from underneath the car, bringing in leaves, twigs and feathers, and completed a full-grown nest. While the bottom layer of material was a bit scorched from the exhaust pipe, the rest of the nest was undamaged. No eggs have as yet been deposited, so it is presumed that the birds had not been living in the car a very long period.

SAVED FROM ELECTRIC WRINGER WHEN PLUG DROPS FROM SOCKET

Elysian—Caught between the rollers of a washing machine by her hair and fingers, Mrs. R. T Edwards of Elysian had a "miracle" escape when the electric plug dropped out of the socket and stopped the machine just in time to perhaps save her life. In stooping over the electric wringer, her hair caught between the rollers, and reaching out to grasp the rolls with her hand, two fingers caught in the wringer. She firmly believes that it was an answer to a prayer that at the moment the electric plug dropped out of the socket and the machine stopped. Being alone in the house at the time, she called for help, but her screams were unheard and she was kept in that uncomfortable position until her husband came home and released her. Mrs. Edwards suffered a severe shock, but is recovering from the injuries and is thankful for what she regards as an act of Providence in the timely disconnection of the electric cord which operated the machine.

TURTLE WITH DATE CARVED IN SHELL RETURNS 20 YEARS LATER

Rochester—A strange, strange story of a mud turtle that came back is told by W. L. Toogood, real estate dealer at Rochester. As a small boy he and his brother spied and seized a mud turtle which had ventured into the farmyard. Before they let it go they marked the date on the bottom of its shell. Time passed and 20 years later Mr. Mud Turtle came back to visit his Toogood friends. It was the same turtle, for on the bottom of its shell it bore the dates marked a score of years before.

'PEN ARTIST' PAYS DEFENSE LAWYER WITH RUBBER CHECK

Fergus Falls—R. C. Neino is a "bad egg". Not only did he defraud Fergus Falls merchants by issuing funds without resources at the bank, but when he was hailed into court he gave his lawyer a check for his services which was returned marked "no funds"! Neino, whose home is in Hutchinson, was arrested for issuing worthless checks at Perham When he was jailed he engaged J. A. Quinn of Wadena to defend him. Neino not only asserted his innocense at the time, but he made out a check to his defense attorney. While Neino was still in jail, the check "bounced back". Neino changed his plea of not guilty to guilty, and was sentenced to serve a term in some penal institution not to exceed one year.

NIGHTINGALE LOSES OUT

London, Eng.—Britons all over the world tuned in to hear the dulcet tones of a nightingale which was expected to trill before a hidden "mike" in Middlesex. What they heard was the robust "Moo" of a Guernsey, who played her unconscious, unscheduled part with such enthusiasm that the feeble notes of the bird were drowned out and radio technicians folded their tents and returned to town. Englismen thrill to the seductive notes of the elusive night-singing nightingale; broadcasters yearly seek to capture its song.

Rehab. Div. Makes 60 Loans in Penn.

Farm families in Pennington County have received 60 loans and grants from the Rural Rehabilitation Division of the Resettlement Administration totaling $15,540.90, according to an announcement made by Anna Dickie Olesen, the State Director of the National Emergency Council.

33 families in the county received $14,858.20 in Farm Management Loans based on chattel and real estate security; 21 families received $182.70 in Emergency loans for feed, seed, and human needs; and 6 families received $500.00 in Emergency Grants.

The total amount of loans and grants disbursed by the Rural Rehabilitation Division throughout Minnesota, as of April 30, 1936, was $6,721,654 62 involving 35,666 families.

This Federal money was distributed throughout the state in an effort to restore farm families, in the destitute and low-income groups, to a self-supporting basis; to reestablish their credit so that loans could be secured from commercial banks and the Farm Credit Administration; to improve their standards of living; and generally, to increase their value to the communities as self-respecting citizens. Guidance in carrying on approved farm practices, provided for in the Farm Management plans also helped considerably toward improving the status of rehabilitation clients.

The distress of the recipients of these loans and grants was largely caused by circumstances beyond their control, such as drouth, crop failure and generally depressed agricultural conditions.

Rehab. Div. Makes 60 Loans in Penn.

Farm families in Pennington County have received 60 loans and grants from the Rural Rehabilitation Division of the Resettlement Administration totaling $15,540.90, according to an announcement made by Anna Dickie Olesen, the State Director of the National Emergency Council.

38 families in the county received $14,858.20 in Farm Management Loans based on chattel and real estate security; 21 families received $182.70 in Emergency loans for feed, seed, and human needs; and 6 families received $500.00 in Emergency Grants.

The total amount of loans and grants disbursed by the Rural Rehabilitation Division throughout Minnesota, as of April 30, 1936, was $6,721,654 52 involving 35,666 families.

This Federal money was distributed throughout the state in an effort to restore farm families, in the destitute and low-income groups, to a self-supporting basis; to reestablish their credit so that loans could be secured from commercial banks and the Farm Credit Administration; to improve their standards of living; and generally, to increase their value to the communities as self-respecting citizens. Guidance in carrying on approved farm practices, provided for in the Farm Management plans also helped considerably toward improving the status of rehabilitation clients.

The distress of the recipients of these loans and grants was largely caused by circumstances beyond their control, such as drouth, crop failure and generally depressed agricultural conditions.

22 Tracts Optioned For Resettlement

Twenty-two tracts of land which will comprise probably 24 or 25 farms have been purchased by the Thief River Falls office of the federal resettlement division to date, according to J. W. Taylor, projects manager here. Farms purchased are largely around St. Hilaire Hazel, Steiner, Silverton and Highlanding. Some purchases have also been made at Mavie and in Kratka township. Two tracts have been purchased at Grygla.

Mr. Taylor returned from the Madison, Wisconsin, regional office on Monday and states that he was told that all options must leave here by June 6th in order that they may reach Washington by July 1st to assure commitment of funds and later payment of optioned tracts. It is expected that there will be at least 35 tracts secured by that time, Mr. Taylor states. It is also possible that there will be an extension of time, and a re-allotment of funds to purchase additional required number of tracts after July 1st.

The appraisers will concentrate their efforts in Marshall county for the next week, in the vicinity of Grygla, Gatzke, Middle River, and Holt.

The paragraph should have read as follows: "All residential current would be thru only one meter. In addition to a ten cents per room charge, residential users would be charged 7½ cents per kilowatt for the first six kilowatts PER ROOM; 5½ cents per kilowatt for the next 50 kilowatts; 3½ cents per kilowatt for the next 100 kilowatts and all over that, 2½ cents per kilowatt.

UNION LOCAL TO FIX CONVENTION PLANS ON WED.

Meeting to be Held at the Bruggeman School in Wyandotte

Members of the Minnesota Farmers Union in Pennington county are invited to meet with the Kratka local at the Bruggeman schoolhouse on Wednesday evening, June 3rd, Otto Rehm, president of Kratka local stated Wednesday. At this time the matter of arranging for the special state convention of the union to be held in this city on June 22nd will be taken up and it is to be hoped that all Pennington county members will turn out and lend their assistance, Mr. Rehm stated. Thos. O'Leary, prominent farmers union leader of Wilkin county will be present to speak, and to help with making arrangements for the convention.

The convention will be only a one day convention, Mr. Rehm said and therefore, inasmuch as there is a great deal of business to be transacted, it will be necessary to have details of the convention thoroughly planned. Among the committees to be named to take care of these arrangements will be a publicity committee, a program committee, a registration committee, and possibly a refreshment committee. The state office of the union has assured the local members that noted speakers will be on the program, and it is apparent that the convention will draw a great many interested farmers union members to the city for the occasion.

The Bruggeman school house, at which the Kratka local will hold its meeting on Wednesday evening, is located two miles east and two miles south of the junction of Trunk Highway 79 and S. A. road number one.

The Farmers' Slice Is Thinner and Thinner

Farm Research, Inc., in its May bulletin from Washington, "Facts for Farmers", reveals some figures that would seem to indicate that overproduction and deflation and loss of foreign markets may not be the only reasons for the farmer's plight.

It quotes Department of Agriculture figures showing that of every dollar spent by the consumer for flour in 1919, the farmer got 70 cents. But in 1935 the farmer only received 30 cents of every dollar spent for flour.

For every dollar spent by the consumer for bread in 1919 the farmer got 35 cents. In 1935 out of every dollar spent for bread by the conanmer, only 17 cents went to the farmer.

Later School Opening Urged

A later school opening to permit boys and girls enrolled in club work and other projects to participate in the Minnesota State Fair, September 5 to 12, without losing one week in class room, has been approved by the State Board of Education.

John G. Rockwell, Commissioner of Education, has sent out a recommendation to all school administrators urging that the 1936-37 school year—grade and high schools—be advanced one week to September 14. The change in the school term, effective this fall, was approved by the State Board of Education as a result of repeated requests from various farm and school organizations, many of which had adopted resolutions asking that such action be taken.

"Many arguments were presented to the Board in favor of the later opening", said Mr. Rockwell. "Most important was the fact that 45,000 boys and girls are actively engaged in 4-H club work in Minnesota, many of whom are exhibitors at the State Fair the first week in September. Setting ahead the opening date of school will eliminate not only the confusion of having these 4-H club workers starting school a week late, but will save them a week's loss from class rooms. Further, the first week of school, or the week beginning Labor Days, is now only four days in length; the weather quite often is unusually warm, and the farmers are usually busier the first week in September than they are the first week in June. The Minnesota State School Association for many years has been unanimously in favor of this change in the opening date."

Since the recommended change necessitates advancing the date for State Board examinations. the Board has voted that these examinations be given one week later than heretofore, this change to take effect at the close of the present term.

Stanford University On Hearst Blacklist

Palo Alto, Calif. (YNS) The name of wealthy, conservative Stanford University is a horrid word for William Randolph Hearst.

The reason, Stanford students think, is that Prof. George Counts of Columbia University, who gave the newspaper publisher a first rate tongue lashing at a teacher's convention in Denver, Col., several months ago, has been asked to give a lecture at the college this summer.

Hence, the name of the far west's most renowned college has been barred from mention in the Hearst chain of papers—until the aged chief of San Simeon changes his mind Meanwhile, laughs are echoing throughout the campus as amused students watch hard-pressed Hearst reporters write their stories without mentioning the university's name.

For instance, a sports story in the San Francisco Call reads: "L. A. team north to Palo Alto today for a meet against the Indians and Olympic Club".

An Associated Press dispatch in the same paper reporting the suicide of Prof. John P. Weller at the University of Nebraska says:

"Weller, 40 years old, received his master's degree from a university at Palo Alto, Cal. and came to the university here in 1928."

A lenghty open letter addressed to "Dear Mr. Hearst" by student John McClelland in the Stanford Daily "Bull Session" states in part:

"The unique honor you have bestowed upon—well, I shall spare you the mention of the name—upon this certain large Northern California University located in the vicinity of Palo Alto has gone unacknowledged long enough." Writing in the same vein, he assured the publisher "the distinction of being placed on the famed Hearst blacklist is not unappreciated", but, he continues, we must "confess that it embarrasses us to go on accepting the honor which our modesty prevents us from believing is due us."

Explaining that Prof. Counts was not hired to preach revolution but to give a talk to a "few students . . . on his way to the NEA convention in Portland" the article states, "And since we can't claim him as one of—whoa, I nearly said it—as one of the Indian's own, it pricks our consciences a little when we have to explain why we enjoy the distinction you have bestowed upon us

"Thanks, Mr. Hearst, but we don't really deserve it. Any college could have done the same thing. We were just lucky."

Each morning will begin with a dip in the indoor swimming pool, followed by setting-up exercises and flag raising. The forenoon will be devoted to classroom instruction. At the assemblies, club members will be privileged to hear many worth while talks and demonstrations, including an address by T. A. Erickson, state club leader; W. F. Munch, state game warden; and Dr. A. A. Dowell, superintendent of the Northwest School.

The girls will be divided into groups according to age so that the instruction will be adopted to each individual. Lectures and demonstrations will include: meal planning, preparing box lunches, eggs and egg dishes, the well-dressed girl, selecting clothing material, 4-H club records, safety in the home, canning fruits and vegetables, selecting the 4-H canning exhibit, shrubs and flowers, and simple kitchen plumbing The boys work will include: judging practice in crops, poultry, and live stock, instruction in care, feeding and management, fitting and showing of livestock, planning the wind break, conservation of wild life, rope work, and inspection of field plots and station livestock.

BOYS FACE ELECTRIC CHAIR

New York, New York (YNS A murder during a hold-up which netted $250 in change has placed six youths ranging from 18 to 30 years of age in Sing Sing's awesome death house.

Salvator Scata, Joseph Bolognia, Theodore Di Donne, Domnick Zizzo and Samuel Kimmel are the young men from Red Hook—Brooklyn's worst slum section who are scheduled to die in the electric chair for the murder of Edwin Esposito, a collector for the Brooklyn-Manhattan Rapid Transit System.

Efforts on the part of the convicted boys to change the pennies, nickels and dimes into dollars led to their capture.

News reels carried the story of the crime over the length and breadth of the United States. Their examination by the district attorneys office was conducted before a news reel camera. The rapid capture was utilized as a lesson that crime does not pay Brooklyn's District Attorney's office, which has been notoriously unable to obtain convictions of gangsters found it easy to convict the boys.

THE GUFFEY ACT TAKES THE COUNT

The supreme court is still batting 1000 against the New Deal and last week the Guffey Act (the Little NRA of Coal) took it on the chin for a knockout.

The decision of the court, both the majority and minority views are interesting because both are sound and consequently the constitution is left looking somewhat ludicrous as an instrument designed to guide a modern nation in its course thru depression straits.

Says the constitution: "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states, respectively, or to the people".

Says the Supreme Court: The validity of the act depends solely on whether or not it is a valid exercise of Congress' power over commerce. Mining is not commerce, but production. Therefore regulating labor, an incident of production is unconstitutional. For regulation of hours and wages is a power that the constitution does not confer upon congress, but is reserved to the several states. Price fixing, says the majority, is so interested with the labor provisions of the Act, that it could not be separated and consequently that too, fell by the wayside. Chief Justice Hughes disagreed with the majority on the price-fixing and agreed with them on outlawing the labor provisions. Justices Cardozo, Brandeis and Stone held the whole act legal, apparently feeling that the public welfare clause in the constitution means something.

All three opinions are points well taken. The constitution very definitely limits the power of congress to those functions delegated to congress. It was an instrument primarily designed to protect private property. The welfare clause was included to give congress broad powers "to advance the public welfare" when such action does not infringe upon the rights of private property.

Tons of Billingsgate will be heaped upon the supreme court because of their ruling. But the trouble lies not with the supreme court but rather with the New Deal which has assumed that the United States is a homogeneous nation when as a matter of fact the constitution very decidedly sets them apart as 48 separate and individual nations having only delegated to congress the problems of national defense, interstate commerce and the regulation of a common currency system. Regulation of hours of labor and wages can only come under the jurisdiction of congress if it is a part of interstate commerce (such as railroads) or in time of war as an emergency measure in the interest of national defense.

Roosevelt and the New Dealers are decidedly skittish when it comes to discussing a revision of the constitution, but that is because they are politicians and consequently fearful of the epithets and sobriquets that will be hurled their way if they should question the soundness of the "sacred" law. However, New Dealers and all others who have some light regard for the public welfare will soon have to choose between perdition with the constitution, or, revision of the constitution.

Every modern nation has long ago found that it must definitely deal with conditions of employment, wages and hours as a part of the functions of government. In England for instance, Robert Owen, economist and co-operator, as early as 1816 appealed to the government to better the conditions of the working class. He presented to the committee of the Commons, a Bill which would regulate the conditions of employment in factories. The Bill was rejected, but in 1819, one hundred and seventeen years ago the English parliament passed the "Peels Act" which was the beginning of regulatory legislation in England. Such regulation is impossible in the United States because of the limitations which the constitution places on the powers of the federal government. The ramifications of intra-state and interstate commerce makes separate action by the several states physically impossible. If we are one large nation rather than 48 separate nations we should have a constitution which allows us to function as such. The job is one for a constitutional convention. The time that patching can suffice is past.

AS WE WERE, AS WE ARE AND AS WE CAN BE

The Printer's Devil had a nightmare the other night, and when he came out of it he brought us a formidable array of figures which stack up about like this:

Said he: "the Forum is just a little over four years old. During the first two months it was a six column, four page sheet and had about 250 subscribers. One copy of the paper weighed just a little less than an ounce. If the full week's edition had been opened up and laid end to end it would have made a strip of paper two feet wide and 625 feet long.

At the present time the Forum is seven columns and 12 pages, or an increase in size of 350 percent. It has 2939 subscribers, or, approximately 12 times as large a list. One copy of the paper weighs 2 3-4 ounces and a week's edition opened up and laid end to end would make a strip of paper two feet wide and 24,000 feet long. Approximately 4½ miles.

Now here is where the nightmare comes in. If the paper increases its size and circulation in the next four years in the same degree that it has grown the past four years, it will in 1940 be a 42 page paper. It will have 36,000 subscribers. One copy of the paper will weigh about half a pound and one week's edition opened up and laid end to end will make a strip of paper two feet wide and 1,008,000 feet long. Something like 190 miles which would be some edition.

Now, we are not stating emphatically that we are going to make this growth. We have the city worthy of such a paper, we have the community able to support such a paper, we have the people that can make it possible if they want to. We are going to call it the Forum Four Year Plan and leave it up to Forum readers, stockholders, directors, staff and advertising patrons to get together and put it across.

We almost forgot to mention it, but the Forum subscription price was $1.50 a year four years ago, is $1.50 a year now and probably will be $1.50 a year or less four years from now.

WILL YOU BITE OFF YOUR NOSE TO SPITE YOUR FACE?

Two years ago the small cities and villages generally, voted republican, while the rural precincts and the large cities voted farmer-labor. The average business man had occasion to realize his error very shortly when the republican majority attempted to saddle a sales tax upon the state. Except for the firm stand taken by a farmer-labor governor, the infamous "Omnibus Bill" would have become law and the businessmen would have had occasion to repent their foolishness at leisure.

The republicans are determined to shift the tax-burden from the big corporations to the small-income class thru a sales tax and under such an arrangement the business element becomes the collection agency which must collect the tax gratis and in this age of keen competition absorb a large share of the tax in many instances. It means that thousands of the small independent merchants will be forced out of business. Constitutional amendment number two which will be voted on this fall is the opening wedge by which the reactionaries hope to force a sales tax upon the state.

Two years ago the businessmen were saved from their own folly by the rural and big city vote. The time is drawing nearer when they can again go to the polls and register their choice of government. While it is admitted that the resort-keepers and big business representatives may be more congenial over the coffee cups than the progressives who are less given to "putting on the dog" and have less cash to do it with, even if they wanted to, the question still remains one of bread and butter as far as the average businessman is concerned. The masses who thru their buying make the merchants prosperous, or thru their lack of purchasing power reduce the merchants' income are spending all their funds for food, clothing and shelter. A sales tax will thus actually come out of the merchants in reduced turnover.

As far as the average businessman of republican proclivities is concerned the question resolves itself; to use a homely phrase; on whether or not he will vote republican, and bite off his nose to spite his face.

ON THE LEWIS-BERRY LEAGUE

(American Guardian)

In response to a request by the Literary Digest for editorial comment on the role of the Non-Partisan Labor League headed by John L. Lewis and George Berry, the editor of The Guardian last week wired the following:

"The Labor Non-Partisan League will clinch the re-election of Roosevelt. The immediate object of organized labor is to raise wages, lower hours of labor, abolish child labor and in general improve the working and living conditions of the toilers. Viewed from this standpoint, Roosevelt is a friend of Labor, for his Administration has made serious attempts to further these objects. If these attempts have largely failed, it is not so much the fault of the New Deal as that of the antediluvian craft unionization of the various industries.

"Viewed from the standpoint of those of us who believe that the evils of modern society can only be eliminated by the substitution of a planned society based on production for use, the formation of the Labor Non-Partisan League is regrettable—unless, as we hope, it constitutes the first step toward the formation of a national Farmer-Labor party."

THE "NEW HOOVER"

(The Progressive)

The "new Hoover" allegedly emerging every time the once great engineer addresses a throng of his fellow reactionaries is the same soured sage of Palo Alto spruced up with a few smart catchwords provided by his agile publicity man and ghost writer.

His Philadeplhia philippic of Thursday was only another of these carefully phrased collections of generalities which seek to destroy but offer nothing meaningful as a substitute.

Mr. Hoover called for a "restoration of morals in government." Does he mean a restoration of Mr. Mellon to the treasury so more billions in tax refunds can be handed out to contributors to the Hoover campaign chest? Does he mean the "morals" of the party that gave the country Teapot Dome, the fraudulent air mail contracts, the post office scandal, and the little green house on K street?

No doubt Mr. Hoover will continue to be applauded by the forces of reaction that have always embraced him. But we doubt if his vitriol will win him an intelligent convert who can remember back over the 12 years of Harding, Coolidge and Hoover.

A LITTLE SIDE LIGHT

(Polk County Leader)

A certain corporation with its home office in Omaha, Neb., and doing quite an extensive business in Minnesota, for the year 1935 reported a loss in its business in this state.

Knowing the volume of business transacted locally by the corporation, the state tax commission was naturally suspicious. An auditor was sent to Omaha to look over the corporation's books. Result: auditor's expenses, approximately $400; benefits to the state, a check for $125,000 for the corporation's 1935 Minnesota income tax.

This means that the corporation, instead of a net loss, as reported by it, made a profit in Minnesota for 1935 of $2,500,000 . . . a nice piece of money, so to speak, for taking out of the state. Incidentally, the above incident . . . and many others like it . . . might account to a large extent for income tax receipts leaping from $2,000,000 in 1934 to $3,500,000 in 1935, in approximate terms.

What Is Production For Use?

By Alfred M. Bingham

PUBLIC OWNERSHIP

It is obvious so long as the source of any particular article or service we desire is prviately controlled, production-for-use is impossible as regards that article. A private electric power plant, for instance, is primarily concerned with the profits accruing to its owners, usually its stockholders, from the sale of its product. It does not provide electric current to all who need it, but only to those with the money to pay for it, including both the cost of the electricity and a handsome profit besides.

Insofar as production-for-use may be extended from one field to another, it can be only by establishing public or cooperative control in that field. And insofar as production-for-use may come to be the dominant form of economic activity, superseding capitalism, this will necessarily mean that private ownership of the means of production—mines, mills, factories, railroads, etc.—will give way to public ownership.

But people who have thought in terms of the older Socialist concepts have failed to realize that public ownership may be very far from full production-for-use, and may be quite incapable of making plenty available for all. It only permits a limited production-for-use. So long as there is a sale for a price in the open market, production-for-use will remain limited.

Thus the private electric power plant may be replaced by a public one. It still will be impossible to provide electric current on the basis of need. Only those with the money to pay for current can have it. The public plant may lower rates by economies and efficiency, and by reduction or even cancellation of interest and dividend payments, but even at the lowest rate this is still only limited production-for-use, unable to release potential plenty for all.

We may increase the scope of public ownership from one field to another, and multiply the individual instances of limited production-for-use, and still not achieve full production-for-use, as a system capable of releasing our abundance.

It is sometimes proposed that along with an extension of public ownership in industry will go a general rise of wages in all these industries, which will produce the necessary purchasing power to enable consumers to buy all the goods produced. If for any reason a shortage of purchasing power arises, the fact that the banking system is to be publicly operated also will permit any necessary subsidies or expansion of money to bring back balance: so runs the argument.

Monetary juggling might make this proposal work for a while. Yet this is not production-for-use. It is still production-for-sale, with purchasing power still at the mercy of the uncontrollable forces of the market. So long as the market remains, whatever controls of prices may be attempted through public ownership or otherwise, just so long will true planning of a desired production schedule, for consumer use, be impossible.

If we could immediately apply the methods we employ in providing school or highway facilities, offering the services free for all comers, then perhaps public ownership would be sufficient. But this is obviously out of the question for a long time.

We must produce for a price even if not for a proit. But if people have not the price, then we are once more halted. We may be ready to produce-for-use but unable to produce plenty because we don't know "who's going to pay for it."

—O—

THE MARKET OR PRICE SYSTEM

We must then examine the monetary system which, within the play of the market, determines purchasing power, before we can understand how to achieve full production-for-use.

At present all our industries, whether privately owned like the Ford Company, or public owned, like the postal system, make their goods or services available for sale on the market at a price—so much for a car, so much for carrying a letter. Ford does not produce cars which he cannot sell. As a whole, business and industry do not produce what the market will not absorb.

Production is determined then by what consumers are buying. But consumers buy only when they have money, so that production depends on the purchasing power available. The purchasing power of most people is derived from wages or salaries or from selling the produce of their labor; a few get purchasing power by renting out land or houses, or in the shape of interest on bonds, or as profits (usually dividends on shares of stock). Labor income depends on earning capacity, and in a competitive system wages and salaries tend to be low because employers want labor cheap.

Now, it is argued that the price of all the goods produced is equal to the amount of money paid out in producing them, as wages or property income so that there should be no shortage of money. In fact, there seldom is a shortage: with a few exceptions in the agricultural fields, goods are not produced in excess of purchasing power. That is the heart of the trouble. It is not that purchasing power is inadequate to buy the goods that are produced, but that purchasing power is inadequate to buy the goods that might be and should be produced.

The available purchasing power is haphazard and unpredictable in amount. It is approximately equal to the goods and services produced simply because production is held down to it, but it bears no relation to needed or desirable production.

Let us look at some of the forces that make purchasing power fluctuate without rhyme or reason. The general price level is unstable, depending on supply and demand and a vast number of unpredictable factors, political as well as economic. The general level of earnings is unstable, depending on unemployment, on the amount of capital construction, on all the variables of the market. Property income, too, is unstable. Then again, the amount of their income that people spend is variable; those with big incomes save a good deal, and what happens to their savings is still another great unpredictable. If the savings are invested in new capital construction, then at least the money goes back into circulation, but if it is hoarded or used for speculation on the stock market or lost or wiped out in a bankruptcy, the amount of purchasing power is by so much decreased. On the other hand, if the savings are deposited in a bank which then uses them as a basis for credit expansion, new money may be created.

Then, too, it must be remembered that any dollar passes through many hands in a year. The speed of circulation is as important as the total amount of money, in determining how much is available for purchases. So long as dollars go on passing from hand to hand indefinitely, while the things the dollars buy are for the most part consumed once and for all, the amount of money that is circulating bears no direct relation to purchasing power.

In fact, it would be hard to imagine a poorer method of distributing purchasing power (which, of course, means distributing income in goods and services) than by this haphazard method—through a money that is variable in amount, in value, in speed of circulation, and subject to all sorts of unpredictable stretchings and contractings, without any relation to productive capacity and to needs.

That is what we call the market or price system, and it is not directly affected by the question of whether a business is privately or publicly or cooperatively run. Of course, a publicly operated banking system that controlled the issue of currency and credit would serve as a stabilizer at certain variable points. But in itself it would not solve the basic defect that production is limited by a haphazard purchasing power. Moreover, publicly owned or cooperatively owned industries might smooth out some other variables, by trying to keep wages up and not laying off workers at the first unfavorable breeze from the market. Abolition of the stock market, price fixing, public control of all investment—these things too would help smooth out variables, but would in no way help to bring spending power in line with productive power.

VIEWS AND REVIEWS

By Ben C. Hagglund

Hail the New Party!

Meta Berger and Heywood Broun, among other Socialists, hail the new Farmer-Labor party, which everyone thinks is assured with a conference called in Chicago May 30, for the purpose of founding such a party. Now the EPIC League of California also hails the new party, and offers its cooperation toward building it on a national scale.

The national Farmer-Labor party is perhaps the only hope for liberals and radicals to realize pressing needs, such as staying the hand of fascism, and maintaining edequate relief for the unemployed. It will be a wall between our civilization and the new dark ages, which threaten to engulf us, if fascists are given a chance to run things.

Killing Off the Ethiopians

The concluding chapters of the Ethiopian tragedy are being written daily, with Italian firing squads busily decimating the population, with a view to cowing the survivors into submission. A new ordinance calls for the execution of every Ethiopian carrying a gun. To the desert tribesman, a gun is life, and is as natural in his make-up as a piece of wearing apparel. Nevertheless, in the resistless march of civilization, the Italian blackshirts are bent upon breaking the will of the desert people. The world, we presume, will be better off when the Ethiopians are but a memory, as are most subdued races now.

Isn't It So?

"After all, a bald-headed barber touting a hair tonic is no less convincing than Bachelor Hitler blandly advocating marriage for everybody else."—Boston Herald.

Father Coughlin, Incipient Fascist

Those who see in Father Coughlin and his Union for Social Justice the saving of our present civilization may well ponder his remarks concerning the recent Student Strike for Peace. The renowned radio priest, instead of commending the youth of this country for their foresight in denouncing war and fascism at this time, when denunciation counts the most in combatting those tendencies, saw the hand of the "reds" in all such actions, and condemned them for it. The estimable father suggested that "right thinking" students form "vigilance committees" in the schools to detect all such subversive activities as those indulged in by members of the American Student Union and the American League Against War and Fascism—whom he dubbed "paid agents from Moscow".

Where is the apostle for social justice in such red-scarey attitudes? We are with Father Coughlin or anyone when he sees the evil influences of a money-system such as ours, but we cannot sympathize with him when he seeks to blast movements which resist the effects of such a system. His use of the phrase "red influence" remind one so much of Hearst newspaper methods, that if one closed his eyes he could not tell the difference

There is a criterion by which all such people can be judged. If they are for the people in their everyday struggles against encroaching capitalism—if they help the people fight for adequate prices, or more relief, or an easing of the interest rates demanded by big bankers—then one can say they are of use in this struggle. But if they seek to escape the responsibilities of every specific fight, and throw up a red smoke screen, then we may doubt their motives. It is not such a long step from the present attitude of Father Coughlin and the practices of a Hitler, for example.

Where Do Uninstructed Delegates Come From?

Howard Brubaker, in the New Yorker, says: "Now we know what happens to little boys and girls who never learn their lessons. They grow up and become uninstructed delegates."

Minute Sermon

By Dr. Crawford Grays

Let us put the sectarian label deep in the background: American Christianity is unChristianly plastered with denominational labels. Maybe it is well, it saves us from saying we are Christian, so we say we are Roman Catholic, or Lutheran, or Protestant, or Methodist, or Baptist, or Church of God; or Presbyterian, or Christian Science, etc

Maybe it is well, but why all in the name of the Carpenter of Nazareth, and under the cloak of The Christian Faith, when the whole situation is so decidedly contrary to both?

Deep within most people attending churches, is a restless feeling there is something wrong with organized Christianity, split as it is in hundreds of division, and subconsciously they wish it were different and a way found for eliminating churches as at present known and establishing institutions for the presentation and practice of Christianity. One way out is the Community church movement. Here and there congregations have been found willing to subordinate their denominational or synodical affiliations toward more unity and union of the people called Christian.

STATE TO IMPROVE 2,400 MILES OF BLACK TOP ROADS

Approximately 2,400 miles of bituminous surfaced trunk highways will be given re-treatments this summer by the state highway department, according to an announcement by N. W. Elsberg, the highway commissioner.

Bids have been called for June 2 on 6,318,000 gallons of bituminous material applied to the roads. This amount will retreat 1,200 miles of highways, constituting half of the total program planned. Contracts for the second half of the program will be let shortly after the first

By E. C. Steng elsen

GRATITUDE

The principal members of the American Liberty League may well shake doleful heads and sadly concede the truth of the oft-heard expression. . .

"There's no such thing as gratitude!"

* * * *

Consider, for example, the contributions which three men, who were formerly loyal Democrats but are now Liberty Leaguers, have made to the Democratic Party since 1928:

Pierre S. DuPont	$90,000.00
Irenee DuPont	$5,000.00
John J. Raskob	$375,000.00

And then consider how scurvily these and others of their group have been treated by the Roosevelt regime! Is it any wonder that these generous gentlemen are sniffing their tearful disillusionment into black-bordered handkerchiefs.

It is a little difficult to arrange, in their proper order of importance, the graceless acts of the present administration, of which the Liberty Leaguers complain most loudly. But if one may classify them according to the varying vigor and volume of the howls with which they are denounced, one may venture the guess that in the discussion which follows, they are placed in approximately the correct order

* * * *

Firstly: The 'New Dealers' are seeking to undermine the Constitution! . . .

The reasoning which gives rise to this accusation is just a little bit complicated. But one gathers that the AAA and NRA fiascos are at the bottom of it.

One guesses that if these Acts had been proposed and passed by a 'safe' Republican administration —after having received the blessing of Messrs. DuPont & Raskob, of course—and had thereafter been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, they would have been merely honest errors of opinion or judgment.

But when they were proposed by the 'New Deal' and directly contrary to the wishes of Messrs. DuPont & Raskob, the situation immediately becomes painfully different. They are, then, an insidious attempt to undermine the Constitution.

The reasoning, as we remarked, is somewhat involved; but we hope that with this explanation, the whole thing becomes simple and understandable.

Secondly: The present farm relief plan (Soil Erosion Act) isn't what it purports to be at all! It is, in reality, a subsidy to farmers.

And subsidies to farmers, as anyone will agree, are wholly improper. In fact, anything for the farmer is improper!

It is only to industry subsidies should be paid—high protective tariffs on their manufactures and free entry of such raw materials as the farmer produces. Shipowners, too, should be paid a subsidy; mail-carrying contracts should be on a subsidy basis. Everything, in fact, should be subsidized, except agriculture.

The farmer has enough with what he now has—his independence, his worn boots and his mortgages.

Thirdly: Through heavy taxation of large incomes—such incomes as those of Messrs. DuPont & Raskob, for example—the safeguard of American civilization is being destroyed!

It is to J. P. Morgan that we are indebted for this bright observation. Quoth Mr. Morgan:

"If you destroy the leisure class you destroy civilization!"

He went on to say that it is the leisure class which constitutes the safeguard of American civilization.

* * * *

Which is, of course, regrettable. For the two classes have always, heretofore, been most chummy and intimate.

In fact, who is there, among the common people, who does not, when in the vicinity of Wilmington, take time to drop in on DuPont! And having placed the travel-stained No. 10's comfortably atop his desk, to inquire in the friendliest sort of fashion:

"Well, Duple, Old Bean! How's tricks!"

* * * *

It is to be feared, however, that by the time the 'New Dealers' get through inflaming us, we won't even take him under our umbrella if its raining

* * * *

Fifthly: One may not be certain just where this final grievance belongs in order of importance; but mindful of the Liberty Leaguer's known unselfishness, their idealism and patriotism, it seems proper to place it last.

Reference is made to certain income tax suits. . .

It appears that Raskob, Mellon, the DuPonts and a considerable number of other Liberty Leaguers or Republicans are being 'requested' by the Treasury Department to pay sizable sums in additional income taxes.

Which is admittedly all wrong. For these gentlemen have already paid their taxes. And they've paid the correct amounts! The amounts must have been correct, for they figured the returns themselves!

* * * *

Even if the payments had been a few cents shy, its no way for the administration to act toward its benefactors! Its almost like waiting till Santa Claus has filled your stocking, then critically sniffing his breath to see if he has had a snort or two on the way.

And every fair person will agree that in return for his generosity, Santa Claus should certainly be permitted an occasional minor lapse without any fuss being made about it.

* * * *

How these income tax suits will ultimately turn out, your commentator will not venture to predict. But it is quite possible that out of it all will come the adoption of a new theme song by the Liberty League, sung by Raskob (tenor), DuPont (baritone) and Mellon (bass) . . .

"Don't bite the hand that's feeding you!"

LIFE'S LITTLE JESTS

LANDLORD'S DECISION

The sad-looking man in the tenement area leaned over the banisters and caught the visitor before she could disappear down a hole in the staircase.

"I wonder," said the visitor, indignantly, "the landlord doesn't do something to repair this deplorable building?"

"Well," said the slum-dweller, philosophically, "he was going to do something about it until he went on a tour to Naples and saw the ruins of Pompeii. . . . Now he thinks this ain't too bad."—Tit-Bits Magazine.

Fair Enough

"What was your plum crop like?"

"Well, a heavy storm blew down 50 per cent of it and we'd hardly gathered that when another wind blew down the rest."

"Bad luck! Could you do anything with them?"

"Well, my wife ate one and I ate the other."—Answers Magazine.

Miss—I don't know. If he's anything like me he would.

Not Curious

Fighting Words:

The diminutive dynamiter waded into the former welter king and hit him with every hook to annex the nod with astounding ease. This, after the toy thumper had been tottering down Queer Street in the very first stanza. It was a merry melee, as twenty thousand paying patrons had anticipated. The hard hitting Harp and the punishing Pisan had never, in the long and honorable careers battled in a barney, and always gave till it hurt—the other fellow. The tremendous turnout was a splendid tribute to the two lion hearted Lilliputians.

Canzoneri, weathering a turbulent initial heat in incredible fashion, came on to batter McLarnin badly, reaching the height of his punitive pasting in the penultimate session. How McLarnin survived this sustained onslaught will ever be a mystery. Canzoneri, like Tennyson's brook, rolls on and on. He is fistiana's enigma. By all the rules of titanic Tony should have been washed up years ago. And here he is, a veteran of twelve years in the squared circle, putting up one of the best battles of his life. Tony has fought half a dozen times since the turn of the year. Now he would like to hook up with Lou Ambers, Pedro Montanez, and Barney Ross within the next three months. We gasp amazingly—and pick the Italian lad to drub the daylights out of all three. McLarnin? Why don't you quit, Jimmy? You are reputed to have plenty of kopeks. We know you have a pretty wife. Another beating like this one, and dire things are apt to happen to you. You might hear an incessant dull roar, have a constant buzzing in your ears, sniff in the manner of a drug addict, walk on your heels, have inclinations to do silly things like cutting out paper dolls —Jimmy, it is a horrible picture. This needn't happen to you. All you need to do to avoid these potential horrors is to—quit. . . . . .

Sports Spouts:

Lawson Little fails to qualify for the National Open. The Achilles of the Amateurs, it seems, is merely a tyro as a pro. Martin Flavin said "Achilles Had a Heel." The chips down elan of the professional putters seems to be Little's vulnerable spot.

The pastoral paradise that is Lakewood, N. J., will serve as the hatching place for all sorts of ridiculous ballyhoo from now on. Joe Louis will begin intensive training for his June joust with Max Schmeling in this ritzy retreat. Joe, in all likelihood, will rescue at least one beautiful damsel from drowning, and in other unforeseen ways comfort himself heroically. You see, we know our unimaginative boxing promoters.

Two years ago the Fusion fire-eater in our millioned metropolis promised the citizenry several swimming pools. These were to be located in the city's larger parks. These pools are still "in the process of construction". Another summer is practically here but it begins to look as if the gasping Gothamites will have to swelter through another summer without enjoying those refreshing and life-saving dips. Of course if you want to spend a dollar or so in one of the many swanky pools in the city, you can have a splashing good time. But—this last crack, I know, deserves no further comment.

Diamond Didoes:

The Tigers have apparently snapped out of their "slough of despond" induced by the staggering loss of Greenberg and are beginning to show signs of being a potent pennant threat despite slugger Hank's enforced absence . . . . Cy Blanton and Clyde Castleman continue to disappoint, fostering the suspicion that they are only two more examples of the first year phenoms who subsequently fizzled. . . Terry's ears are growing larger and fuzzier daily as Parmellee hurls exceptionally and Whitehead bats rather poorly. As the Giants' mounds corps is not going any too well at present, and the Cards are safely esconced in first place, this swap with the Cards probably haunts the harried Terry on many a sleepless night. . . . Lefty Grove's string of victories has finally been broken. But he'll start a new one before you read these lines. . . . The Daffy Dodgers are getting superb pitching—and nothing else. Outside of Buddy Hassett, nobody on the Gowanus squad is belting out a sufficient number of base hits. With a .350 hitter in the line-up the Stengelites would have a first division chance. . . . The four teams favored to finish in the first division in each league are already up there. It wouldn't be a staggering surprise to us if the teams finish up in their present order. . . . Give the hard thumping Chisox one star pitcher and the team would leave the second division doldrums. The team is a mighty tough article as it is. . . . Pie Traynor seemingly has a find in that kid Bill Brubaker. Pie, the best third sacker in the circuit for years, may have the best third sacker of the future in this nineteen year old. . . . So long till next week.

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—The Duke, a pleasant, likable youth of twenty-three, jobless and broke, enters an unoccupied summer home in Southampton, seeking shelter from a terrific rain storm. He makes himself at home. Six years ago his father had died in China, leaving the lad, Barry Gilbert, to fight his way back to the States. He did not recollect ever having had a mother. Dozing at the fireside, he is startled by the arrival of a butler, Willetts; a chauffeur, Evans; a cook and a maid. He learns that the son of the owner of the house, Jack Ridder, whom the servants had never seen, is expected. He decides to bluff it out. His supposed parents have left for Germany. Next morning he is given a letter for his "mother." He opens it and finds a message from the real Jack, saying he could not come, and returning a hundred-dollar bill. The boy's father had pensioned him into obscurity. Barry pockets the money, intending to return it later. He orders Evans to take him to Montauk, intending to disappear there. On the way he assists Judge Hambidge and his daughter, Patricia, whose car had broken down. Believing he is Jack Ridder, she invites him to dinner the following Thursday.

CHAPTER II

WELL, of all the mad resolutions!

"I'm going to wind up in prison," reflected the Duke. "And, as a good many wiser men have done, on account of a girl."

"A snip of a girl, at that!"

He grinned at that.

"Stop at the railway station," he instructed the chauffeur. "I've got to see about my bag."

But, oddly enough, the bag hadn't arrived.

Willetts had been very apologetic about sending the master away for lunch. "It's cook, sir. She's new, and, what with the kitchen all upside down—"

"Don't worry," interrupted the Duke. "I had a capital time. But what are we going to do about clothes, Willetts?"

"Well," the butler responded, "there's your father's tailor, sir. Crowell, on Fifty-first street. You could start an account there, sir. And Mr. Ridder Senior gets his haberdashery at Bartlett's, and his shoes at Kennedy's."

"All that takes time," Barry objected, "and I'm going out to dinner next Thursday. I haven't a shirt to my back, Willetts, or anything else but father's purple pyjamas."

Willetts' face brightened.

"If you can wear those, sir, I don't see why you can't wear Mr. Ridder's linen—in an emergency, sir. There's a whole high-boy full of it in your closet, sir. And he's got a dozen summer suits in that cedar chest."

"Flannels, too?"

"Oh, plenty of flannels," answered Willetts. "And golf trousers. They're sure to fit."

Both men smiled.

"What's the matter with Evans?"

"He seems morose," said the Duke.

"The fact is, Evans' wife is very ill, sir."

"In Patchogue?"

"Yes, sir. We left her there. That's what made us late last night."

"Go on."

"That's about all, sir. Mrs. Evans has been ill some time. It's a kind of anemia, sir. Evans didn't want to leave her. When he found he was coming out here—only yesterday, sir—he asked Mr. Ridder if he could bring Mrs. Evans. There's quite a big room over the garage. And Mr. Ridder said, 'No.' And then Evans decided to put her up in the village for a few days. But she was taken bad at Patchogue, sir, and we had to leave her at a hotel. Evans was a good deal upset."

"I see," said the Duke.

He thought about the matter all through dinner.

As he was quitting the table, "Willetts," he said, "I think you'd better tell Evans to go back to Patchogue, and get his wife. Tonight, if she's fit to travel. My father won't know anything about it, and it seems a pity to waste that room over the garage."

"Yes, sir," said Willetts.

He went on thinking about it before the fire.

"The trouble with people like my father," he ruminated, "and Pat, is that they don't know what it is not to have enough. They've never known, or they've forgotten. We must've experienced things to have any feeling about them. If you see a man shot, you're horrified. But if you read about fifty thousand men killed in battle, it doesn't mean much to you."

"My father—"

And suddenly he realized that, when he said, "My father," he was thinking of John Clarke Ridder.

"If I stayed here a month," he reflected, "I'd be calling the old man 'Dad.' Already, I'm calling the girl 'Pat.' Making myself at home—that's what I am. Better clear out after dinner next Thursday. Or after breakfast Friday. I'm simply ruining my appetite for baked beans!".

Willetts interrupted his meditations.

"Evans would like to know if you'd see him, sir."

"Of course, tell him to come up."

He had an embarrassing ten minutes with the chauffeur—embarrassing, but very heart-warming. The surly Evans was transformed. Barry never had seen anyone else so grateful.

"Tell you what we'll do," said the Duke. "I've got to go to town to get some clothes and things. I'll ride with you to Patchogue, and take the train there. You can bring Mrs. Evans home, and I'll take another train out from New York."

Evans tried to speak, but without success.

At the door Evans turned.

"I'll get square with you for this some day," he said, and gulped hard, and left the room.

Mr. Crowell was most obliging. Duke remarked, "I've just come up from Florida, and lost my baggage en route. I've got to have a suit by next Thursday. Can it be done?"

"I'm afraid not."

"Can you make a pair of flannel trousers by then?"

"I think so."

"Go to it," said the Duke.

He caught Mr. Crowell inspecting the tag sewn onto the back of his waistcoat. Well, that was all right, and, of course, nothing could be wrong, when the trousers were to be sent by parcel post to "John Clarke Ridder, Jr.," at Southampton. Before the Duke departed, Mr. Crowell had secured orders for a sack suit and evening clothes. "Charge 'em to my father," the Duke said, and Mr. Crowell answered, "Certainly, and I'll let you know when we're ready to try on."

This procedure, and those following at the haberdasher's and the shoemaker's, ruffled the Duke's conscience far less than the hundred-dollar bill had done. "I'll pay it all back some day," he thought.

The Duke leaned back in the Long Island railway's best parlor car, and opened a newspaper he had bought at the station. Almost instantly, he saw his new friend's name again. "Jefferson Street Condemnation Just Another Grab," the headline ran. "Civic Association Brands Proceedings Before Judge Hambidge' as Bare-faced Loot of City Treasury."

"They're certainly making it hot for him," Barry mused.

He wouldn't have read the story, but for its reference to the Judge. Even so, he read it very casually. Somebody wanted to turn a side street into a boulevard. That involved buying a lot of property. And the property owners weren't willing to sell for what the city was willing to pay, so "condemnation proceedings had been instituted"—whatever they might be—and Judge Hambidge was to fix the value of the ground and houses.

"Who really owns this property?" the Civic association asked. The corporation that held title was an obvious stalking-horse. It had been formed, and had purchased the land, and buildings, only a few months before the beginning of municipal interest in Jefferson street. And it was demanding a million and a half for "a few relics of a better day in this neighborhood that would have been dear at half a million." Tammany's paw was visible in the whole transaction, according to the Civic association, and the impending decision called for prompt action from individuals and organizations aware that Judge Hambidge was a Tammany judge.

Reaching home, he went straight to the library.

The Duke's gaze fell upon an envelope addressed to his other self.

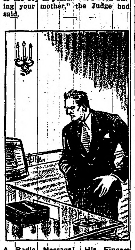
A radio message! His fingers stiffened.

The Judge hadn't waited to write. Damn Marconi! Feverishly, he tore open the wrapper.

"Just to let you know that I am very happy stop couldn't sleep last night for thinking of you home at last stop can't tell your father yet stop please please try to spend summer in such a way as to make reconciliation possible stop praying for word on arrival stop God bless you and love. Mother."

For once, the Duke didn't grin.

"She didn't care what it cost," he said, but there was no humor in that comment. He was picturing a hurried, heart-hungry woman, slipping furtively up to the wireless room, and handing in this message herself, so that no steward should unwittingly betray her. The first word she had been able to smuggle to the boy in years. "It's been killing your mother," the Judge had said.



A Radio Message! His Fingers Stiffened.

"Where's Evans?"

"In the garage, sir. With his wife."

"Ask him to run me down to the village. I want to send a telegram to my mother."

"Very good, sir. The car'll be here in a minute or two, sir. And I'll hold dinner."

Barry never thought any harder than he did during that short ride. What could he say that would make his mother still happier, and yet mean nothing if the message fell into the hands of that hard, old man?

"Radio received," he wirelessed at last. "Will do my best. Writing. Willetts."

She would understand.

The reaction came after dinner. "Maudlin, that's what I am," thought the Duke. "Just before I get a message signed 'Mother.' The first one I ever got."

"Damn fool trick—sending that wireless. Sooner or later, she's going to find out it was fake, and then what good will I have done?"

Thursday's dinner started off on the wrong foot.

The Duke wore his new flannels and his old gray coat. It was not a warm evening, but he had nothing else to wear.

He could see Patricia taking him in. She was lovely in cherry-colored crepe de chine, and the Judge immaculate in black tie and dinner jacket. "You said we could fight things out on the tennis court," the Duke apologized, "and I'm afraid that stuck in my mind. The truth is my luggage hasn't turned up, and I had to wear anything I could find."

"You should have worn a strip of bunting, and brought boxing gloves," the Judge laughed. "If you and Pat are going at it as you did at the club."

"What would happen if we agreed about anything?" asked Patricia.

"I'd be wrong, Miss Hambridge; I'd be wrong!"

The retort was no more his own than the shirt on his back, but he was rewarded for it by an appreciative flash in the girl's eyes.

The girl chattered about everything.

Hard-boiled. A modern, and proud of it. Why should people be proud of being "modern"; a state, like kingship, that you achieved merely by being born? And, so far as modernity was a point of view, why preen yourself because you didn't believe in anything except your own right to be happy?

This girl had had no contact with life. Walled about in a pleasant garden, she delivered herself of smart, brittle opinions of conditions she had never experienced, people she had never seen. But you couldn't help liking her. And it began to be evident that she liked him. "You're different, at least," she said. "Different from any other man I know. Really not a bit like a rich man's son."

"I've been on my own a good while," he reminded her.

Barry learned a good deal about his adopted father that night. And, when Patricia left them for a few minutes, the Judge repeated, "He's certainly no sentimentalist—that gentleman. We're supposed to be friends and his paper goes on attacking me. The Civic association—that's nothing on earth but The Globe. And now they're all at it. Talking about my taking orders from Tammany."

CO-OPERATIVE NEWS NOTES

SCANDINAVIAN BULB FACTORY AUGMENTS OUTPUT

The Luma Electric Bulb factory of Stockholm, Sweden, owned by the coop wholesale societies of Sweden, Finland and Denmark, increased output from 1,372,000 lamps in 1934 to 1,643,000 lamps in 1935, a rise of 20 per cent. These figures do not include the working of the Luma factory in Norway. The Norwegian Co-operative societies, which formerly purchased 400,000 lamps a year from the factory in Sweden, now obtain their supplies from the Norwegian works. Output of the Norwegian Luma was 600,000 lamps.

Holiday Home for Co-op Workers

To mark the occasion of the 50th birthday of Albin Johansson, manager of the Kooperativa Forbundet (Swedish Wholesale Society), G. W Anderson, a Swedish co-operator, has donated an old mansion and grounds at Skagersholm to K. F. for use as a holiday home for its employees. The beautifully furnished mansion dates from the 18th century.

FIVE PER CENT EXPENSE RATIO AT PALO STORE

Palo, Minn.—An expense ratio that's nearly 50 per cent below the average for the C.C.W. stores, a volume rise for the year of almost 24 per cent and a debt-free business after only 5 years of operations are some of the things the co-operators in this little farming community can boast of.

The expense ratio for the fiscal year just ended was only 5.53 per cent of the sales as against the 10.87 per cent average for 1935 of all the member societies of the Central Co-Op. Wholesale. The volume for the year totaled $41,208, a rise of $7,917 (23.78 per cent) over the previous year. A net gain of $3,236 was realized.

The disposition of the gain as well as other questions pertaining to the society, will be decided at the membership meeting scheduled for June.

The society, started "on a shoestring" in 1931, has current assets of $5,379 and total outside liabilities of only $204.

Henry Koivisto is the manager.

CO-OPS PROPOSED AS ALTERNATE TO FASCISM

Washington (FP) Consumer's cooperatives were pointed out as an alternative to fascism and a means of lowering retail prices to consumers by Frederic C. Howe, special advisor to the Secretary of Agriculture, when he testified in favor of the Scott bill to establish a federal consumer's administration and cooperative bank, now before the House committee on Banking and Currency.

IOWA FARMERS UNION HAS BIG SHARE OF BUSINESS

The Farmers Union Livestock Commission of Sioux City, Iowa, enjoyed a very fine percentage in the last two weeks of April, 14 to 29, in the hog division. The commission handled from 11 per cent to 14.21 per cent of the hogs and had an average of 10.3 per cent for the entire month. In the month of April, 3,301 head of cattle and calves, 8,287 head of hogs, and 4,504 head of sheep. The total value of the livestock handled in the month was $451,056.12, according to L. M. Koch, manager.

CO-OP WORKERS' UNION TO SEEK PAY INCREASES

Newberry, Mich.—The local cooperative society, one of the few that fell into tha hands of the Communists in 1929 when the Communist Party began its drive to make co-operatives their milch cows, showed a net loss of $343 for 1936. The Newberry society had been one of the most prosperous of the Communist group

Similar Communist-led co-operatives at Keewatin, Minn.; Chisholm, Minn.; New York Mills, Minn.; Eben Junction, Mich.; Detroit, Mich.; Owen, Wis.; and Plainfield, Conn., have passed out of existence as a result of clique control.

CO-OP STORE TURNS LOSS OF '34 TO PROFIT IN '35

NEWS of the WEEK

COMET ON ITS WAY

Delphos, Ohio—Using a small home-made telescope, Leslie C. Peltier, local draftsman and amateur astronomer, has discovered five comets in eleven years. His latest and subject of congratulations from Harvard University Observatory, is 150,000,000 miles away and heading for the earth. Harvard astronomers calculate it will come within twenty million miles in July, then swerve away, but will be brighter than any comet since Halley's in 1910.

VALUABLE WALL PAPER

Chicago, Ill—When stocks nose-dived in the depression, the Union League Club of Chicago invited members to contribute "worthless" stock certificates to paper a private dining room. It took $1,000,000 worth to cover the walls. So many stocks have now "come back" that the club is soaking the certificates off the walls, returning them to pleased former owners.

MARRIES ON HIGH SEAS

New York City—A wireless announces the marriage of William B. Leeds, heir of "tin-plate King", to Miss Olive Hamilton, switchboard operator of Atlantic City hotel, whom he rescued from drowning six years ago. Cruising on his yacht, Leed's captain performed the ceremony "according to the laws of the high seas".

BIG VELOCITY TESTER

Langley Field, Va.—Scientists studied the new concrete and steel tunnel for testing airplane resistence. An 8000 horsepower motor drives an air-stream at more than 500 miles per hour, proves that an airliner's skin friction is reduced 25 per cent by eliminating rivet heads; also that above 575 miles per hour present wing designs lose most of their lifting power.

MODEL REVOLUTIONS IN BOLIVIA

La Paz, Bolivia—Politicians who have come to connect South American revolution with gun-fire and assassination, marvel at Bolivian's restraint. After turning out of office President Jose Luis Tejada Sovenzo and his liberal government without a shot, Col. David Toro, 37-year-old Provisional President, threw out a junta that seized the reins during his temporary absence and set up a new cabinet. No shots, no deaths, no injuries.

BANKERS GET RULING

Washington, D. C.—National banks and Federal Reserve members now have a ruling from J F. T. O'Conner, Controller of the Currency, on what securities they may buy for investment. No bonds in default as to principal or interest are permitted; nor are bonds "in which the investment characteristics are predominently speculative."

SOME EXPENSIVE MILLINERY

New York City—Last January a piece of plaster fell from the ceiling of the Board of Education and crushed the $3.00 hat of Miss Mary Hallett, WPA worker. Since then various boards of investigation have spent $100 in time and red-tape to decide, after all, that Miss Hallett is entitled to a new hat.

OLYMPIC PLANS WELL ALONG

SHERIFF GETS LYNCHING BILL

New Orleans, La.—Because testimony showed that a Sheriff's deputies took part in the lynching of Freedy Moore, negro, three years ago, a jury in the Federal Court awarded his parents $2,500 damages against the sheriff and his bondsmen for neglect of duty in not preventing the lynching. Anti-Lynching advocates hail this solution of the lynching problem, instead of suing the county. In Indiana 36 years ago, a widow won $4,000 from a Sheriff and his sureties in a similar action.

ONE-CLUB GOLF STAR

Southport, England—Toters of 25 pounds of golf impediments are referred to Miss Gloria D. Minoprio, a Frenchwomen living in England, who went to the semi-finals in the British Women's Championship using only one club. With her solitary instrument, a cleek, she consistently drove 200 yards, hoisted out of sand traps and putted with deadly accuracy. Winner of the tournament, however, was Miss Pamela Barton, the caddies' nightmare, who crams into her bag 18 clubs, dozens of extra balls, sweaters of different weight, boxes of tees, towels, a tent-like umbrella, a shooting-stick to rest on between waits and a knapsack of cosmetics. American entrants all went down to defeat.

103 GRADUATE AT EXERCISES ON FRIDAY EVE

Dr. Fred Engelhardt of Minn. U. Speaks on the Value of Education

SPECIAL AWARDS TO HONOR STUDENTS

Annual Event Presided Over by Superintendent Morris Bye

Dr. Fred Engelhardt of the University of Minnesota spoke to the 103 seniors and 15 teachers training students on "What Value Do We Place on Our Education" at the commencement exercises held Friday evening, May 29, in the municipal auditorium. Education should teach students the spirit of cooperation, Dr. Engelhardt said, so that they may work together in harmony to common goals and to common ends. It should also help to preserve the individual personality at the same time that it instills the spirit of cooperation. Dr. Engelhardt placed the value of education not so much in the monetary returns it ultimately brings, but the valuable insight it brings to the solution of life's problems and human adjustments

Special awards in recognition of outstanding achievements in various phases of high school life were presented at the commencement exercises. Principal W. G. Claffy in behalf of the American Legion presented the certificate and medal annually awarded to the outstanding boy in the senior class, to Jack Booren. A similar certificate and medal given by the American Legion Auxiliary to the outstanding senior girl, was presented to Alice Ann Severson by Mrs. Thora H. Nelson. Arthur W. Nelson, valedictorian of the senior class, received two scholarships and also a science award for his outstanding work in science during his high school career. Edna Lee, highest ranking girl of the senior class, also received scholarships. Jack Booren was awarded a scholarship for a six-week's summer course of study at the McPhail School of Music. Music scholarships from Drake University were awarded to Helen Granum and Robert Douville.

Superintendent Morris Bye presided as chairman of the program, which included, in addition to the commencement address and the presenting of diplomas, teachers certificates, and special awards, the processional and recessional marches, the salutatory address by Victor F. Jung, the valedictory by Arthur W. Nelson, and selections by the Lincoln high school mixed chorus, under the direction of Miss Erma Springen.

County Auditor Warns That Delinquent Real Estate Taxes Must Be Paid In June

Attention of owners of tax delinquent property is called to the fact that the Chapter 387, Laws of 1935 expires on June 30, 1936, Co. Auditor, A M. Senstad, stated this week. This is the so called tax discount law and the opportunity of discounting delinquent taxes for 1930 and prior years will be lost if not taken advantage of this month. This law results in substantial savings to the property owner as the discount ranges from 80 percent to 20 percent of the original tax the percentage being determined by the first year delinquent. Notice of expiration of time of redemption has been served on all real estate descriptions that are delinquent for the year of 1929 and prior years, and these land will forfeit to the State this year unless the taxes are paid. The forfeiture date in Pennington County is October 8, 1936, however the discount law ends June 30. The schedule of discounts are as follows: 1922 and prior years thru 1925 can be paid at 20 percent, 1926 to 1934 inc. at 50 percent.

1923 and 1924 through 1925 can be paid at 33 1-3 per cent, 1926 to 1934 inc, at 50 per cent.

1925 or 1926 through 1934 can be paid at 50 per cent.

1927 or 1928 through 1934 can be paid at 60 per cent.

The above list of discounts is on the original tax all penalty and interest being waived, however the law provides that in settling a delinquency under discount the whole delinquency must be taken and for cash. Property owners must remember that the discount law ends June 30, 1936.

While lands delinquent for 1929 and prior years will forfeit to the state this year, October 8 in Pennington County, taxes delinquent for 1930 will not forfeit until 1937. Notices of expiration of time of redemption will be served on 1930 delinquency some time this summer Persons wishing to buy certificates under the discount law must proceed according to law and give one years notice before taking possession of the land.

BONUS BONDS TO BE MAILED VETS JUNE 15 AND 16

Must be Delivered to the Veterans in Person, Postmaster Says

CAN BE SENT IN TO BE CASHED AT ONCE

Veterans Must Be Identified and Receipt for Bonds on Delivery

Local veterans who wish to cash their bonus bonds without delay will find the local postmaster's office available to facilitate matters for them, Postmaster Andy Anderson stated this week.

The bonds are being sent out to the veterans from the Minneapolis office on the 15 and 16 and will be delivered to the veterans by the postal department during the next few days. Mail carriers are instructed to deliver to addressee in person and they must be signed for as registered mail. They can not be delivered to another person even though they may be addressed to the veteran in care of some one else. It makes no difference if veterans have made loans on their certificates thru the veterans administration or thru the banks. Both classes will receive their bonds as soon as they can be delivered—if they are at home to answer the postman's call Veterans who are unknown to the postman will have to be identified, Mr. Anderson stated. The bonds will carry simple interest at the rate of 3 percent, but no interest will be paid if they are cashed before June 15, 1937.

The postmaster or his assistant will act as certifying officer for those who wish to cash their bonds at once. They may call at the postoffice and turn in their bond, for which they will get a regular receipt and they must then sign a request for payment. The bond and request will be sent to the paying office at St. Paul and government check to cover will be returned as soon as they can be acted upon.

In case the postoffice finds it impossible to deliver the bond due to the absence of the veteran, the bond will not be forwarded to another address, but will be held at the local office until the veteran returns to the city, Mr. Anderson stated. After being held 30 days they will be returned to the issuing office as being undeliverable however, Mr. Anderson said.

Wolf Demos Open State Campaign

St. Paul, Minn.—Primary campaign headquarters for the so-called "regular Roosevelt slate" of Democratic candidates headed by Fred A. Curtis of South St. Paul for governor, this week was opened in the Hotel Lowry, St. Paul by the Democratic state committee of which John F. D. Meighen of Albert Lea is chairman.

The headquarters was opened by Meighen's committee on behalf of the slate of primary candidates endorsed at the state convention of 3,000 delegates held in St. Paul on April 21.

In addition to Mr. Curtis, others on the state slate who are seeking Democratic nominations in the state-wide primary June 15 are Patrick J. Delaney of St. Paul, for U. S. Senator; A C. Knudson of Detroit Lakes, for lieutenant governor; Thomas Gallagher, Minneapolis for attorney general; Carl Henneman, St. Cloud, for secretary of state; Ida McCabe Kayser of St. Peter for state treasurer, and C. H. Jacobson of Fergus Falls, for railroad and warehouse commissioner.

Two members of the ticket are practicing attorneys, another is a graduate of a legal school, and another is a newspaperman.

Mr. Curtis and Gallagher are the practicing lawyers. Mr. Delaney is a graduate of the law school at the College of St. Thomas, St. Paul. Mr. Knudson was mayor of Detroit Lakes for more than 10 years. Henneman is the newspaperman, having been a member of the staff of the St. Cloud Times for many years. Mrs. Kayser is a prominent clubwoman and civic leader and Mr. Jacobson is a real estate and insurance man.

Willard J. Moran, St. Paul attorney, has been appointed campaign manager for the group. Mr. Moran is a war veteran and has been active in veterans affairs for many years. In 1932 he was one of the organizers of and the first state chairman of the Veterans Democratic Club of Minnesota, which was a big factor in organizing the Minnesota State Democratic convention of that year in behalf of Franklin D. Roosevelt's nomination for the presidency.

Thousands of Farmers Off Delinquent Lists

Payments of over $3,831,600 of State and county taxes in Minnesota has removed the names of thousands of farmers from delinquent tax lists and helped to reduce farm tax sales in the State to about half the 1933 level, according to John D. Jones, Jr., general agent of the Farm Credit Administration of St. Paul.

Some 28,300 Minnesota farmers refinanced their debts through the Federal land bank and Land Bank Commissioner since the Farm Credit Administration was organized and, in many instances, the loans included funds to pay back taxes owed by farmers to local tax authorities.

The total amount loaned for the purpose equals an average tax payment of about $130 per farmer refinanced.

The $3,831,600 covers tax payments in connection with $140,824,000 of land bank and Commissioner loans made in Minnesota from May 1, 1933 to January 1, 1936. About 2.7 per cent of this amount was used for tax payments.

Payment of back taxes as a result of Federal land bank refinancing has provided timely assistance to the various counties to pay school teachers county officers and meet other local government expenses

Insurance Rejection of Youth Laid To Drinking

The Family Economics Bureau of the Northwestern National Life Insurance Company of Minneapolis has just completed an exhaustive statistical research to determine the relation of drinking habits to the rejection of applicants for life policies.

Discussing some of the findings reported H H. Parish, Executive Director of the Minnesota Temperance Movement said: "The most appalling revelation is the increase of 183 percent in the number of young applicants whose excessive drinking habits render them uninsurable. This is nearly three times as many as in 1932, the last year before the legalization of beer, which was closely followed by the repeal of the prohibition amendment.

There is nothing to be gained by bemoaning the stupidity and ignorance of those who believed that repeal would reduce drunkenness and debauchery among youth. The problem is not, Who is to blame for the tragic condition? The question is, What can be done to remedy it?

Beer is the first and the chief cause. Youth is taught the fatal falsity that beer is harmless, moreover, it is so universally available at eating places and dance halls as to provide a constant temptation.

That Minnesota's lax beer laws result in evil consequences beyond the average may be gathered from the record of our State Inebriate Hospital at Willmar which shows that the last year before prohibition that institution treated 390 alcoholics. The first year under prohibition the score dropped to 26 and the third year to 6. Last year, the second year under repeal, the number jumped up to 304.

If the next session of the legislature has any care for truth or for the youth of the state, it will take the lie that beer is not an intoxicating drink out of the statute books.

Season Opens for Bass, Crappies in South Zone

The season for bass, crappies, and sunfish in the southern zone in Minnesota opened on Friday, May 29 In the northern zone the season for these species opens on Sunday, June 21.

The southern zone includes all territory lying south of a line drawn through Browns Valley, Morris, St. Cloud, Princeton, and Cambridge. The northern zone includes all territory lying north of this line.

Fishermen are again reminded by A .C. Hanson, Division Director, that all game fish, regardless of size may be retained and counted, with the exception of stream trout which must be retained and counted.

Catch limit for bass is six per day with 12 permitted in possession; for crappies, 15 per day with 25 allowed in possession. For sunfish, rock bass, and all other fish not named in the laws the daily limit is 15 with 30 permitted in possession.

It is unlawful to buy or sell game fish of any kind. It is illegal to take fish by means of explosives, drugs, poisons, lime, medicated bait, nets, tip-ups, trotlines, wire strings, ropes, and cables.

AIR FLEET FOR PEACE IS URGED

Geneva—Peace needs to be publicized At least members of the International Peace Council who met here recently think so. All worthwhile commercial articles, they argue, have their high-pressure advertising men, Airplanes have been pressed into service to write the names of their products in letters of smoke for sky gazers to read. Since peace is of inestimable value to every citizen of the world, the International Peace Council's members propose to make people peace-conscious by organizing fleets of peace propaganda airplanes to write a message of good will to all mankind across the sky.

GERMAN PEASANTS GET 6 MONTHS TERMS FOR DEMONSTRATION

Mannheim, Germany (YNS) Merger of a Catholic and a lay school in the "spirit of National Socialism" won such wide approval of the Catholic peasantry in Klein Hausen that 14 have been sentenced to 6 month jail terms.

Parents and children showed their "approval" of the "convincing, sensible and National Socialist plan" by demonstrating their opposition for two days. Appeals by the police to disperse went unheeded by the irate peasants.

Fear that heavy sentences would further inflame the already aroused population of the village, was the reason for the relatively mild sentences imposed upon the convicted peasants.

Amlie Will Not Attend Chicago Conference

Congressman Thomas R. Amlie chairman of the American Commonwealth Federation, said today that he would not be present at the conference to be held in Chicago May 30th to discuss a national Farmer-Labor party, and declared that statements appearing in the press that he and other officials of the Commonwealth Federation would take part in the conference were unauthorized and without foundation.

Although the Commonwealth Federation has been actively engaged in bringing about a political realignment since its formation last July, Mr. Amlie stated that the conference which has been called for May 30th is not in accordance with the policies laid down by the Federation.

"While we are unable to obtain any official information as to who has been invited to this conference," Mr. Amlie stated, "it is evident that all of the leading Communists of the country will be present

"Our past experience with Communist Party groups has been of such a nature that the Commonwealth Federation has been obliged to adopt a policy that it will not attempt to work with them, and will have nothing to do with any movement for a new party which admits them. We feel that this rule is necessary because past experience has demonstrated that the Communists are out of sympathy with our program and philosophy, and that they seek admittance to our councils not to work with us toward the ends which we seek, but to gain control of our organizations for their own purposes.

"I regret that it has been necessary for me to make a statement of this nature about the conference on May 30th. I have been obliged to do so because persons officially connected with the committee which issued the call have informed the newspapers that I would take a leading part in the conference, after I had specifically informed them that I could not take part. In fairness to the people who have been working with the Commonwealth Federation, and to those who may have been influenced by these incorrect reports, I feel that it is necessary to give them this information."

EXPRESS OFFICE WORKERS BRAVE 5,000 ESCAPED BEES

Mankato—Employees of the Mankato railway express office added their names to the honor list of the brave who carry on in the face of danger, when they continued their routine the other day undaunted by some 5,000 bees which swarmed about the office, routing many a customer who decided his mission could well wait until a better day. The bees, part of a shipment estimated at 500,000, escaped from their crates between trains, on their way to Windom. Windows in the office were black with the insects for hours, but no casualties resulted during the day. Bees in the express office, even escaped bees, are not unusual. The event was not unprecedented, tho no one in the office has been stung by one of the usually passive working bees since the 20's And why, asked the express staff, should they be intimidated by a mere 5,000 bees when they have dealt with anything from a rattlesnake to an uncaged bear in the past?

WHAT IS NATIONAL DEFENSE?

Congress has appropriated sums for the army and navy departments that during the next year will touch the $1,100,000,000 mark. Such expenditures in time of peace were vigorously condemned by the members of the House and Senate and by such organizations as the National Council for Prevention of War as placing America squarely in an arms race, the end of which has always been war.

Among the statesmen protesting this unprecedented war budget was Senator Elmer A. Benson, Farmer-Laborite of Minnesota. He pointed out, and has since emphasized the fact, that the United States has no policy whatever to guide Congress in spending money for national defense. Indeed, he asserts, although the appropriations are made in the name of "adequate national defense", no one has ever come forward to say what "adequate national defense" is, or how much of what kind of military and naval strength the country needs to protect us from invasion. He charges that the lack of a defense policy and the lack of a definition of defense leads to ever-growing demands on our treasury to support an army and navy for unknown purposes, and results in grave misunderstanding here and around the world of what our army and navy are for

To correct this present situation Senator Benson has introduced a resolution asking the President to appoint a commission of civilians who will survey the nation's defense needs and lay down a defense policy in keeping with our avowed expressions of peace: In doing so, the Senator is asking only what the Democratic party pledged in its 1932 platform, which called for just such a survey.

It is beyond hope that Congress will take up the Benson resolution at this session. But before our legislators in Washington act on the army and navy bills next year, they ought to find out what kind of defense is necessary, and how well it is being provided. In other words, we, the taxpayers ought to know if we are getting our money's worth.

THE PROPOSED LIGHT AND POWER RATES

An analysis of the light and power rate structure proposed to the city council by the civic and commerce association clearly indicates that the C and C are representing the commercial users and will not hesitate to pass the burden of city government to the shoulders of home owners and residential users. Being faced with the fact that the revenue from the municipal plant can not be substantially reduced without in many ways crippling the city's financial structure, they have devised a rate structure which would give commercial light users reductions ranging from 17 per cent to 46 per cent. On the other hand the residential users are under their proposed structure saddled with increases of from 1 per cent to 40 and 50 per cent.

The writer collected six light and power statements at random and applied the new rate structure to form a comparison. Here are the results:

"A" is a residential user in a four room house. He used 24 kilowatts and his net bill under the present rate is $2.17. Under the rates proposed by the C and C he would pay $2.20, assuming that there would be no meter rent and no discount. His bill would be increased 1 1-2 per cent.

"B" is a residential user in a six room house. His net bill under the present schedule for 29 kilowatts is $2.60. Under the proposed rate he would pay $2.70. An increase of 4 per cent.

"C" is a residential user in a five room house who also has an electric range. His current bill was $5.90. Under the proposed rate he would pay $8.16. An increase of $2.26 or about 39 per cent.

"D" is a store using only 16 kilowatts a month. The current net bill is $1.55. Under the proposed rate the bill would be $1.28. A reduction of 17 per cent.

"E" uses commercial light and power. 92 kilowatts lights and 241 kilowatts power costing respectively $7.68 and $13.24; a net bill of $20.92: Under the proposed rates the bill would be for lights $7.15—an 8 per cent reduction and for power $12.05—a 7 per cent reduction for a net total of $19.20.

"F" is one of the largest commercial light users in the city. They would get a reduction of around 46 per cent.

We have no quarrel with the C and C as representatives of the business interests of the city. That is what it was organized for and properly so. It is when they claim to represent All of Thief River Falls that we clash with them, and we feel that before any new schedule is fixed, the home-makers should also be consulted.

As representatives of all the citizens of the city, the council should if it decides to revise the electric light and power rate structure, consult and consider everyone involved. If there is to be a reduction in rates, the home-makers should get the same proportionate reduction as the commercial users. That would only be fair and equitable.

After all, while the city needs its business establishments, it also needs its home-makers if our community is to prosper. This is a point that the C and C should bear in mind when it undertakes to dabble in questions which concerns and affects all of us. If it attempts to further the interests of one group at the expense of another, it lessens its own power for good in the community. We would suggest that the C and C withdraw its suggested schedule and reconsider its provisions with proper regard for the interest of all the people.

GRACIOUS, HAVE WE BEEN UNDULY ALARMED?

M. E. Ravage, writing from Paris, France, in the Nation says it is over two weeks since France went 'Red' and nothin' ain't happened like they said it would, yet. Can it be possible that a nation can go far left without at the same time going to the dogs? Can it be possible that we, who have quaked with terror at each approaching election for fear that the voters should get foolish and vote farmer-labor, and thus bring upon us dire and untold consequences, have wasted all that delicious worrying to no avail whatever, and nothing fearful would have happened? And if all those worries we have worried about would come to worry us after we had worried thru the election, is not to worry us, then what are we to worry about?

According to Mr. Ravage, they were told before the election in France—"oh, what weren't they told?—that if they voted for the 'Front Populaire' they would step off a precipice into the abyss. M. Maurice Prax of the 'Petit Parisien' had an interview with Bela Kun in Madrid—on the same day that another correspondent of the same 'non-partisan' newspaper reported the Bolshevik agitator ill in Moscow—where he was directing the Spanish revolution and only waiting for May 3rd to cross the Pyrenees and take charge of things in Paris. The 'Front Populaire' meant all the calamities in the calendar. It meant war, civil and international. It meant the collapse of the Franc—the communist slogan 'No Devaluation' was shameless demagogy—and the collectivization of the vineyards, the nationalization of women and the destruction of the family, the raping of nuns and the burning of churches, death and disorder, with a German invasion and a Fascist dictatorship to redress the balance. Well, it's nearly two weeks since these assorted disasters were predicted. Yet, somehow Notre Dame and the Sacre Coeur are still standing."

And since these things do not happen there, probably they won't happen here. And then the worriers who have worried us with their worries will have to worry up some new worries to worry us with in the future. And that's something else to worry about.

THE DEPRESSION OVER—DOWN COME THE CATS AND DOGS!

(The Progressive)

When the stock market was at its ebb, when Mr. Insull was dodging the authorities in Greece, and when Mr. Hoover was in the White House, a room in the wealthy Union League club in Chicago was papered with approximately $1,000,000 of stocks, bonds, and "securities" that had fallen to approximately zero in value.

This week the "million dollar room" was visited by paperhangers and decorators, and the "cats and dogs" taken down and returned to their original owners. Some of them have had a recovery on the market and now have a value. The room is to be redecorated and re-christened the "gold room."

E. W. Martin of the club's public affairs office, explained the action to reporters.

"With the depression on the wane, we decided to put aside anything that would remind us of those dark days when it seemed the stock market had no bottom," he said. "The new name of 'gold room' will strike an optimistic note that we hope will be in keeping with the future."

Isn't it strange that from the midst of such good cheer come so many denunciations of Mr. Roosevelt and the New Deal? The Union League club at its frequent dinners is regaled by speakers who see the nation on the brink of ruin because of the Roosevelt program, the applause is long and loud.

Instead of thanking the man who captained the nation and instituted a program that made recovery possible and brought the cat and dog securities down from their falls, they malign and condemn.

And, incidentally, speaking of "putting aside anything that would remind us of those dark days," how about putting aside Mr. Hoover and the rest of the Old Guard Republicans who got the nation in the mud and kept it there?

AN ASTONISHING STORY

(The Minneapolis Journal)

The proposed Minneapolis & St. Louis dismemberment, at first a matter of concern chiefly to the Northwest, has now become, thanks to the McElwee letter offered in evidence before the Senate investigating committee, a threatened national scandal.

The charge of James L. McElwee of Peoria, is that an employee of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation devised the plan of dismembering the railroad and selling the pieces to half a dozen competing railroads, as part of a plot to save one of its chief creditors from loss at the expense of the other creditors. Mr. McElwee's letter purports to give the details of this plot as revealed to him by John Barriger, III, the RFC employee in question.

Senator Shipstead and his committee may be depended on to go to the bottom of this astonishing story in order to establish the truth. But there is nothing inherently improbable in it. Many a depression wreck in the past few years has been looted by receivers, security holders' committees and favored creditors. Squeezing dollars out of stranded corporations to enrich those little entitled to them has been all too common an adventure.

The St. Louis Road, let us hope and expect, will yet be saved to serve its fertile territory and to give fruitful employment to its army of deserving employees.

CONFUSION IN EDUCATION

(The Progressive)

President Robert Maynard Hutchins of the University of Chicago has again trained his inquisitorial eye squarely on his own profession. His conclusions, embraced in his current Yale lectures, are certainly worth passing on.

The system of higher education declares Dr. Hutchins, has lost its meaning in a maze of confused aims, so that the college degree no longer means what it should, or did. For instance, he charges that "institutions have lost their souls trying to do something to get money."

Moreover, colleges have pursued a confused notion of democracy which allows students to stay in public education as long as they like, studying aimlessly, haphazardly, until finally a degree is cinched.

So confused is the training offered, says President Hutchins, that all students are shunted down the same groove, with the result that higher learning is sidetracked.

In a word, the college program calls for some sharp revisions, and Presiden Hutchins seems to have pointed the way to a few of them.

WRONG PLACE

(St. Paul Daily News)

Revelation that Harvard men hoisted the red flag over the United State supreme court building is interesting.

It was a typical trick like forcing a cow into the belfry of the campus church—only worse.

There is little doubt that the perpetrators enjoyed the sensation which the incident invoked. And it may have a wholesome result in a way by reminding us that even so august a tribunal is not so far removed from mundane affairs that it is not subject to an occasional joke—even of a doubtful variety.

For our part we should have preferred to see these joksters hoist the red flag over the offices and headquarters of some of our professional Red hunters. This would have been more in keeping with the jitters a lot of these professionals profess to feel every time somebody has an original idea with which they do not agree.

OUR CONGRESS GOES MILITARIST

(Farmers Union Herald)

On May 1 the House of Representatives passed the Naval Appropriations Bill in the amount of $531,068,707. The Army Appropriation Bill of $543,341,506 has already become a law.

For army and navy we have therefore appropriated a total of one billion, seventy-four million, four hundred eleven thousand, two hundred and thirteen dollars. And all this when the Government could not find funds for seed and feed loans, and has cramped Resettlement until that department cannot carry on its rehabilitation work.

Right here in the United States we can find a billion for armament, but are so poor that we cannot spend fifty millions of dollars to provide destitute farmers with seed and feed to plant a crop. And we call that progressive and liberal statesmanship.

THE COMMON PEOPLE

Mr. A. C. Shong, well known Milwaukee educator, gives this definition of 'History':

"History is the story of the rise of the common people."

To most of us, this is a new concept. We had seen history merely as a glamorous story of wars and conquests, as a recital of the doings of kings, princes, and generals, as a tale of diplomatic intrigue and bargaining . . .

We had quite failed to understand that despite their glamor these were, in the final analysis, unimportant—except insofar as they affected the surging, almost hidden movement underneath; that they were important only in the degree they advanced or retarded the progress of the common man. . . which is to say, 'Civilization'.

* * * *

For there have been periods of retrogression, as there have been times of swift advance. The advance was swift and relentless in proportion to the extent to which it had been held back.

Rebellions against intolerable government are examples in point.

* * * *

Not the least of the obstacles which have impeded man's progress has been his own ignorance.

For at no time in mankind's history has progress advanced with such long strides as it has since the invention of printing. . .

Not only did the spread of knowledge which followed sharpen his discontent. It also lighted the way to achievement.

* * * *

Most of the barriers in the way of his progress were, however, raised by his own kind. For progress is change. And there have always been those whose selfish interests were best served by absence of change.

* * * *

Since the dawn of time, this has been true. The 'Old Man' of the tribe, who, in prehistoric days ruled his small group with an autocratic hand, probably opposed change. For he had doubtless observed that when changes were urged by his followers, almost invariably these threatened a diminution of his authority or an encroachment on his power.

And so his interests demanded that matters should remain as they were. He was the original 'Conservative.'

* * * *

Through the whole, long, wearisome journey from savagery to civilization, the conflict between mankind and its 'Old Men of the Tribe' has been constant: There has been endless war between the masses, who were pressing upward to a greater participation in the desirable things in life, and those whose selfish interests required that change be opposed.

* * * *

Until within comparatively recent times, the fight waged by the common people was against despotic and unjust government. Gradually, despotism was swept away and a measure of political freedom achieved by mankind.

But a new autocracy rose to take the place of the political oppressor . . . The finacial and industrial oligarchy of our modern times. And like the feudal lord and the absolute monarch whom it replaced, it is vehemently opposed to change.

* * * *

In America it expresses its opposition to change through such groups as the American Liberty League, the Manufacturers' Association, or the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, or through such media as the Hearst press. The political organization through which it seeks to gain its ends is the Republican Party.

Those who question the truth of this observation have but to consider the sponsorship of these organizations or their past record. One is not, then, long in doubt, either as to their purposes or true identity.

The Hoovers, the Landons, the Shouses and the Hearsts may preach eloquently about the 'progressivism' of their masters . . .

But they will be utterly unable to point to one single piece of progressive legislation, traceable to those for whom they act as mouthpieces

Invariably, such legislation originated with some 'irreconcilable' or 'radical' within the Party's ranks. And the Party gave its grudging approval only after the legislation had been choked down its throat by the Progressives, or after the clamor of an awakened public opinion made it politically unsafe to continue the opposition.

* * * *

If proof of the Party's reactionary character is needed, the reader is asked to remember back to the second Coolidge administration, when the Progressives were 'read' out of the Party and patronage taken away from them because they refused to vote in the 'regular' manner instructed by the Party bosses.

* * * *

No one, who sees through superficialities and is able to envision the slow, upward crawl of the common people through thousands of years, opposed by the very forces for, which the Liberty League, the Chamber of Commerce, the Manufacturers' Association, the Hearst press or the Republican Party stand, will be misled.

* * * *

But as mankind has been able, after centuries of struggle, to throw off economic oppression.

Those who challenge this statement are blind to the clear lessons taught by history.

And those who oppose the advance of the common people have before them only the dismal and certain prospect of endless retreat.

It was doubtless ordained from the beginning that it should be thus. . .

Because God loves the common people, perhaps. It can hardly be otherwise. For if He didn't love them, He would hardly have made so many of them.

What Is Production For Use?

By Alfred M. Bingham

A proper balance between savings and investment is often proposed by conservative economists as a solution. This might smooth out the terrific ups and downs of boom and depression, but it would not solve the problem of poverty in the midst of plenty, the problem of inadequate purchasing power in the face of abundant resources.

Clearly a new approach is essential. Production-for-use in place of production-for-profit is the answer. But it ought to be obvious from the foregoing that this means far more than elimination of profit, or of profiteers; it must mean elimination of our present open-market, price system, where money available for purchases is always an uncertain variable amount, bearing no relation to the real wealth that can and should be produced.

The key to the solution perhaps lies in making clear the difference between "token wealth" and "real wealth". Pieces of paper with ink marks on them—dollar bills, stocks, bonds, mortgages, notes, checks—have no value in themselves (except the possible aesthetic value of handsome portrait engravings). Their importance lies in their exchangeability with real wealth, such as food, clothes, houses, automobiles, and the like. At present they are issued without regard to how much real wealth we should or could produce; yet they determine, in all sorts of chaotic ways, how much we do produce.

Production-for-use means that we first decide how much real wealth we can and should produce, and then issue to consumers whatever tokens they may need to buy that real wealth.

There are various possible methods that may be followed. The easiest to understand and the simplest is to issue tickets similar to theatre tickets. Knowing the capacity of the theatre, an equivalent number of tickets are printed for a performance on any particular evening. Those who get tickets are sure to find a seat and when they have been admitted the ticket is destroyed. Here we are not concerned with how these tickets are distributed to the holders, but we are concerned with the fact that these tickets (token of value) are issued in exact balance to the capacity of the theatrical production.

If this principle were generally followed it would mean that tickets would be issued in exact balance to the goods and services to be made available during any period of time. Goods and services are made available in a steady stream, not like a theatre performance one in an evening. The planned flow of goods and services would have to be divided into time periods, say of one month each. Having planned the desirable and possible flow of goods and services for a month, tokens would be issued in a sum equal to the total prices of all those goods and services. Each token could be used only once, and if it were not spent during the month it would be cancelled as if it had been spent (just as an unused theatre ticket becomes valueless).

How the token wealth is distributed is not the question at the moment. It would find its way to consumers chiefly in the form of wages and salaries, large or small. But the key to this solution is that consumers would have purchasing power or token wealth equal in amount to the real wealth available for purchase.

The same result could perhaps be achieved, as it is done in Soviet Russia, through a state bank, which estimates the flow of currency and credit over a period of a year, and strikes a rough balance, by means of its central planning agency, between the amount of goods and services available for use and the currency payments to individuals.

This second method, however, might meet insuperable obstacles during a transition period, when there were still many of the unpredictable variables of the profit system in a large sector of the economic system. The first method, a direct issue of tokens to consumers, has the great advantage that it could be applied in piecemeal fashion to a production-for-use sector of the country's economy.*

The method chosen, and a detailed plan are not essential for our purposes here. But the principle is essential. It may be summarized as follows: If we are to have production-for-use, we must have a planned budget of needs and desirable production. And then, to get the real wealth into the hands of consumers, an equivalent amount of token wealth must be distributed.

Production-for-profit means a gambler's chance on an unpredictable roulette wheel. It is not a system, but a chaos. It means the vast majority are poorer than they need be. It means idle men, idle resources, idle machines, and a vast amount of non-production.

Production-for-use means plenty for all. Consumer choice may be as free as ever, but no consumer need be without the means to buy. There may be as much variation in incomes to buy. There may be as much variation in incomes as we may choose, but no one need be jobless or penniless. Production-for-use means that we act like intelligent human beings cooperating for our mutual assistance, rather than like jungle beasts destroying our own wealth in the competitive struggle.

*This is the method elaborated in the "Common Sense Plan of Transition," published in April and May, 1935, and available in pamphlet form at 10 cents.

To The Editor:

We hear occasional remarks about the Townsend Plan, that a pension of $200 is too much. I will admit that at the present valuation of the dollar it perhaps is too much, or at least more than is necessary. But what is money, anyway? The best definition of money is given by the renown Norwegian statesman, and author, Mr. Wingi, "Money is the accumulated and crystallized sweat drops from the toiler."

Now my argument in favor of the Townsend Plan is this: If $200 a month is too much for one person, then it is also too much for the other. If we could limit the pension minimum to $200 and for good measure, not to exceed $2500 per month, there would be a great abundance for everybody. But if $200 per month is too much for the common man, then we should reasonably assume that $2000 or even as much as $200,000 per month for those who are juggling with "the crystalized sweat drops" should be checked up. The Townsend Plan aims at upsetting the apple cart of "Dealers in Misery" and scatter a reasonable share of these "crystalized sweat drops" back over the country from whence it came. Remember, it CAN and WILL be done, if the people will stand united and demand fair play for the general public.

Money is as plentiful or as scarce as these "jugglers" wish to make it. With the Townsend Plan the same dollars will return monthly by this revolving plan, but it becomes "dated money" so it can not be hoarded. In other words, it will not remove one dollar from the supply of money, but it will put billions of dollars into circulation. The present crying need is to restore purchasing power to the public.

The Doctor Died First

There is hope for the capitalist system yet, despite all the Thomas Nixon Carvers alive. (Dr. Carver has just recently been added to the medical advisory board of the Republican party, to tell what is wrong with the ailing system.)

The reason for my optimism is this: The other day I asked an 80-year- old man to what he attributed his longevity, in spite of the fact that in early manhood he suffered from a multitude of ailments. "Well", he replied I had all my teeth pulled, my appendix removed my tonsils out, and who knows what else—finally my doctor gave up. But the doctor, was an old man, and he died before I did."

Southern Cotton Workers Fight

The cotton workers of eastern Arkansas, organized into the Southern Tenant Farmers Union, are out on strike. Although five thousand tenant farmers and laborers have laid down their tools, at the period when the cotton needs weeding, the overlords are unanimous in their claim that no strike exists.

One cannot say that the owners have exactly closed their eyes to the situation either, for they have taken very definite action. At one place they herded thirteen negro strikers into a stockade like cattle, and a group of others were herded into the fields, at the point of sawed-off shotguns. In spite of these actions, the strike holds.

Some things which may mean success for the strikers are, first that the strike was arranged with the utmost secrecy, scond that preparations for it have gone apace for several months—laying in of food supplies, etc., third, that the opportune time was picked, and fourth that a strong picket line has been thrown across the bridge leading from Memphis, Tenn., into strike territory.

And what are these determined serfs striking for? Their demands are simple: a ten-hour day and $1.50 for that day. One must remember that it's an old southern custom not to furnish board and room with this munificent wage. And what were they getting? Working from dawn till dusk, the average laborer pulled down seventy-five cents in cash money.

Already conditions are better. Some owners, less pugnacious or probably worse financially situated than others, offered workers a dollar a day

A fact that puzzles the embattled landlords is that this strike is not engineered by "outside agitators". It probably scares them to realize that the southern cotton workers are beginning to think for themselves. On the other hand, it is the signal for a determined effort to stamp out the "foreign idea."

Sherwood Eddy, former national head of the Y. M. C. A. went down there to investigate, and was told quite pointedly, "We'll run Arkansas and you keep out of this state or you'll be sorry." That is the general attitude of the owning class down there.

Some day their power will be broken entirely, and the slaveocracy they exercise over their tenants dissolved, but until that time they are well-nigh supreme, for they virtually control local and state government. At present it takes a sturdy will to go counter to their wishes.

Farming Speeds Erosion

BY C. O. ROST,
PROFESSOR OF SOILS
UNIVERSITY FARM, ST. PAUL

Virgin lands suffer little from erosion. It is only when the natural cover is disturbed or removed to establish agriculture on the land that problems of erosion arise. However, we must have suitable land for agriculture if food and other staples necessary for the needs of man are to be provided. We cannot then leave the cover nature provided but must disturb or remove it to make way for crops.

Once this cover is removed the loosened oil is exposed to the action of wind, water. These tend to remove the upper soil from its original resting place and in many instances expose a much less productive sub-soil.

In the past the American farmer has given little thought to controlling soil losses. Ample supplies of new land were still available so that new farms might be taken up when the old ones became "worn out" or "washed out".

This situation no longer exists. All lands suitable for agriculture have now been put to the plow and we must look forward to conserving our soil by reducing the speed with which lands wear out or wash out. Although erosion may never be completely stopped, on our arable land, it can be greatly reduced.

Usually the wearing out of land has been associated with the exhaustion of available plant food, when in fact the loss of surface soil by erosion was an important contributing factor. Not only has the surface soil in many locations been carried away, but the surface of the land has been scarred by gullies which have cut down the fields until they are too small for economical farming.

PEACE PRINTS INVADE THE FASHION WORLD

New York—Dame Fashion is becoming peace-minded. One of the newest of dress materials to appear on the market is a silk print designed with the word "Pax" which is the Latin for "peace". Women everywhere who want to express their feeling against war are enthusiastically taking up the idea of wearing these prints. New York stores are catering to their wishes and selling both ready-made dresses and yard goods in the "Pax" prints, which come in a variety of designs and colors. Men's ties are now on the market and several types of jewelry with the "peace" motif are being designed by smart stylists.

IT'S STILL VACATION TIME AT HAVANA UNIVERSITY

Havana, Cuba (YNS) Despite the formal opening of Havana University, which has been closed since the beginning of 1935, continued sessions appear very doubtful

The university was shut down when the students went on strike in support of the revolution against Machado. Soldiers were the only occupants of the school after the strike was declared. Only 60 of the 8,000 students normally attending the school have returned to class. Claiming that the "freedom" granted the students is a farce, they are holding out until their list of demands is granted in full.

HOMING PIGEON LOSES WAY; LANDS IN MINN.

Park Rapids—A homing pigeon that was 1300 miles from its home cote was picked up recently by R. J. Story of Hubbard. The bird carried a message contained in a tiny aluminum cylinder attached to its wing, but was "slightly" off its course and appeared very much lost in the wilds of Minnesota and over a thousand miles off its course. Story forwarded the message the pigeon carried to the party addressed, and a few days later received a message in return from the Hazelton Brick Co. of Hazelton, Pa., telling him the bird was their property and had been released eleven days before from South Orange, N. J. The pigeon was declared by its owners to have been one of their most dependable carriers and used for carrying many important messages. How or why it got off its course and landed in Minnesota is not known. Story returned the bird to its owners and received as a reward two young homing pigeons from the Hazelton concern as a gift.

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—The Duke, a pleasant, likable youth of twenty-three, jobless and broke, enters an unoccupied summer home in Southampton, seeking shelter from a terrific rain storm. He makes himself at home. Six years ago his father had died in China, leaving the lad, Barry Gilbert, to fight his way back to the States. He did not recollect ever having had a mother. Dozing at the fireside, he is startled by the arrival of a butler, Willetts; a chauffeur, Evans; a cook and a maid. He learns that the son of the owner of the house, Jack Ridder, whom the servants had never seen, is expected. He decides to bluff it out. His supposed parents have left for Germany. Next morning he is given a letter for his "mother." He opens it and finds a message from the real Jack, saying he could not come, and returning a hundred-dollar bill. The boy's father had pensioned him into obscurity. Barry pockets the money, intending to return it later. He orders Evans to take him to Montauk, intending to disappear there. On the way he assists Judge Hambidge and his daughter, Patricia, whose car had broken down. Believing he is Jack Ridder, she invites him to dinner the following Thursday.

"What's the use of stopping one paper?" Patricia inquired, entering the room. "The others would keep right on. Did you ever read any of the things they wrote about Abraham Lincoln? Be a brave old gentleman, and don't let it bother you."

She laughed, but her eyes were very tender as she laid her hands on the Judge's shoulders.

"That's why I like her," thought the Duke. "Because I see what she'd be if somebody scraped off the enamel. She's got the makings of some girl!"

It was after midnight when Barry climbed into his car, calling back. "Remember, you're dining with me next Thursday!"

"All right. And we're having house guests over the following week-end. The Winslows. My mother was Mrs. Winslow's sister. Peter's a prominent lawyer, and it won't hurt you to know him. And I've got an old school friend coming from Boston. Will you dine with us again that Friday?"

"I'll board with you, if you ask me!" Barry replied exuberantly. "But that lets me out," he vowed, on the way home. "This can't go on forever. Something's sure to break, and I don't want it to break anywhere near that girl."

Standing before the mirror, in faultless evening dress, on Thursday, he thought the thing out. "If I can't get a white-collar job with these clothes, and the new feeling this thing has given me, I'm a wash-out. I'd like to make good now. Darned if I know why, but I would!"

He made up his mind to go to town the next day, and have another try at it.

He was still contemplating himself in the glass.

On the whole, it was a very successful evening. The Judge seemed even more worried than he had been a week before, but Barry's good humor was irresistible. Patricia had asked about his experience in Florida, and he found himself combining purely imaginary adventure there with anecdotes of park benches and the flop house in New York. Truth and fiction blended so wonderfully, and seemed so real.

The Hambidges went home early, but in much better spirits than they had brought with them, and Patricia paused at the door to remind him of their engagement for the following Friday. "You'll have to come the week after that, too," she said. "My Boston friend can't get here next week, and she's especially anxious to meet you."

Patricia must have written about him, then. By Golly, he would get that job—if only to show her that he could do something better than dance.

Barry's first two days in town were fruitless. There weren't many studios in New York, and they didn't seem to be doing much. I'm going to look over the 'Business Opportunities' in the newspapers," said the Duke.

Most of them were opportunities to part with a little money. But Barry didn't give up hope.

On Wednesday—eighteen days after his advent at Southampton—the Duke got a letter from Mrs. Ridder.

My Own Dear Boy: I write this as we are leaving Cherbourg, and shall try to post it at Southampton. How I wish it were our Southampton, and that I were about to see you. Your radio message arrived duly. I understood, of course, and it made me happier than I have been in years. Don't laugh, but I have slept with it under my pillow.

I wanted to write you at once, but it has been hard to get a minute away from your father. He really is very ill, and a little irritable, and the doctor says any shock might prove serious. Of course, I want to tell him about you, but perhaps it's as well that I can't just yet. We shall be away until the end of July, at least, and perhaps longer. By that time I shall have had such good news of you as will enable me to win him over. He does care for you, dear. As much as I do. Perhaps more, and that is why his pride has been hurt, and he has seemed so hard.

I do hope you have given up drinking. That has been your real enemy. And I do hope you will find work. Nothing else will go so far in persuading your father. He must change his will. It isn't the money I'm thinking of so much as its bitterness. He has taken care of the household expenses at Southampton. (Did I tell you that we were going to open the place, anyway? We've had Willetts ever since we've had the house, and our agreement is that his winter lay-off isn't to last over six months.) Your father gave him his check when he came to the hotel the morning we sailed, and will send him one every month, to pay servants, etc. I am enclosing another hundred dollars for you. Cash, because my bank account's rather low now. That's all, except that I am counting the days to your letter at Nauheim. I want that letter, dear. You can never know how much I've wanted it, and how long, and how I pray that nothing may happen now. One false step on your part—one foolish exploit like that at college—if he knew, would end everything forever. And he would know. Ill as he is, he still has his newspaper sent him, and he still reads every word.

If I seem over-anxious, you will understand. You are almost all I have.

Mother.

P. S. Don't fail to write.

For the first time since he had inserted his knife blade under the dry putty of that window, the Duke felt ashamed of himself. Deeply and thoroughly ashamed.

"What can I do?" he said. "I can't write. And what would be the use? One letter, and then silence. Some day, she's sure to find out that her boy never came near Southampton . . . I wish to God I could find that boy!"

Thursday's evening paper was full of Judge Hambidge.

"Hambidge Decision Due," the headline read. "As Civic Association Links Holding Corporation with Boss Kelly."

The link didn't seem very strong. Kelly, who evidently was some potatoes in Tammany Hall, had once employed one of the "alleged dummy directors" of the corporation that owned the property to be used in widening Jefferson street. "In the face of this sensational disclosure," the paper asked editorially, "will Supreme Court Judge Hambidge have the courage to give these men the fabulous sums they ask for their rookies? Judge Hambidge insists that he has never even met Mike Kelly. 'I have never spoken a word to him in my life.' Judge Hambidge's decision is long overdue. When it is handed down, the city's voters will know whether Boss Kelly has ever spoken to Judge Hambidge."

After that, Barry wasn't surprised to find the Judge absent from the next night's dinner party at his house. Evidently, the pack was in full cry. Friday's evening paper had a headline that ran clear across the street. Still unfolded, Barry had left the paper lying on the library table, with Boss Kelly's name filling most of its visible quarter-page.

Naturally, Patricia was disturbed. "Father spoke at a banquet last night at the Astor," she explained. "And he wouldn't let me stay in with him. 'I'll sleep in the hotel, and take a train out in the morning,' he said. An hour ago, he phoned that he'd been unavoidably detained."

"I fancy he didn't feel quite up to the trip," Peter Winslow added to Patricia's apology. "The speech must have taken it out of him, and then, afterward, he saw a woman killed by a taxi-cab."

"Oh—Peter!"

"Yes. The Judge called me early this morning, about his decision in this condemnation proceeding. He'd just sent it to the county clerk's office. And his voice sounded rather shaky. He'd gone for a walk after the dinner was over, he said, and the taxi dashed out of a side street just as the woman stepped off the curb. The driver jammed on his brakes, and skidded right up onto the sidewalk. The usual hit-and-run business."

"What did the Judge talk about at the dinner?" Barry asked, chiefly to change the subject.

"I don't know. I haven't seen a paper today."

Winslow seemed preoccupied, Barry thought, but a mighty fine fellow. A famous criminal lawyer, but so simple and kindly. He was a big chap, loosely put together, and his graying hair was loosely brushed back from a face that was square in every sense. The two men clicked at once. Barry loved Peter's manner to his wife—a soft, round, pink little woman, with worried eyes. Peter was always jollyin' her—gently, whimsically, protectively. "My yes-man," he said of her. "Anything I do is right."

"That's only my move to make the decision unanimous," smiled Mrs. Winslow. She had wit, in her own quiet way.

"I never met your father," the attorney remarked to Barry, in the drawing room, after dinner. "You work on his newspaper, I suppose."

"No."

"Don't you want to do anything?" he asked.

"Very much."

"What?"

"Anything."

"That won't get you far. Can you write?"

"Like the lady who was asked if she could play the piano, I don't know—I never tried."

"You should be able to write—with your father's gift of trenchant expression. You've got it, too, in conversation. My brother owns a big advertising agency. I'd like to have you meet him."

"I'd like to," said the Duke. "I do want to work." He hesitated. "I've been in town almost every day this week, looking for a job."

He caught Patricia's surprised glance.

"Come in and see me," Winslow suggested.

Just his damned luck! Here was a job—a career, probably—for the asking, and he couldn't take it. Not as John Clarke Ridder, Jr. But Patricia's eyes were still on him, so "I'll be in Monday," he said.

When he had made his adieux to the Winslows, Patricia accompanied him to the door.

"I owe you an apology," she declared. "You're not just a rich man's son. You're something quite different. And I'm—glad!"

"Some girl!"

When he reached home, Willetts was waiting in the hall.

"There's a lady to see you, sir."

"At midnight?"

"She got here around eight o'clock. And she wouldn't go. She's upstairs in the library."

"What kind of a lady?"

"Sort of glittery, if you ask me," the butler replied.

"Did she come in a car?"

"One of the station taxis, sir."

"How's she going to get back? Never mind! I can rouse Evans, if we need him. You go to bed."

Very much on guard, he climbed the stairs to the upper rooms.

Willetts was right; her eyes were "glittery." And hard. A woman who knew her way around, Barry would have said. And yet there was something tender about her, too. She had a sharp face, with a a slightly protuberant chin. Her lips and brows and lashes were heavily made up, but her hair, nondescript in color, escaped in soft waves from beneath her cheap little red beret. She wore a shabby black dress, and her shoes were badly worn.

All this, Barry observed in the long moments before she spoke.

"You're not Mr. Ridder," she said.

Her voice was hard, too. Like the girl, hard and yet pitiful. It seemed on the point of breaking.

"Yes," Barry answered. "I am."

"Not James Clarke Ridder. Not the old man."

The Duke breathed again.

"Not the old man, of course," he said. "My father's in Europe. I'm John Clarke Ridder, Jr."

The girl stared at him.

"You mean you're John Clarke Ridder's son?"

"Of course."

She kept on staring.

"Somebody's crazy," she said.

It had come, then. It was bound to come. Was Willetts listening in the hall? What would Patricia say?

"Somebody's crazy," the girl repeated, "and I don't think it's me. Or somebody's a liar, and I don't think it's him!"

And, suddenly, she began to laugh.

"No," she shrilled; "it's you! It's written all over your face! And it's funny, because you've walked into a pretty mess."

"I—?"

"If you're John Clarke Ridder, Jr., I'm your wife."

"My wife?"

She stopped laughing, as suddenly as she had begun. "That's it," she said, and her voice was harder than ever. "I'm your wife, and you're under arrest for killing a guy!"

CAPITOL NEWS REVIEW

By A. I. Harris

It is now becoming apparent to every Liberal and Progressive in America that the United States Supreme Court, as it is at present constituted, stands as an effective barrier against all demand. The recent decision in the Guffey Coal case merely serves to furnish additional evidence of that fact. . .

To date neither of the old parties has taken a stand to remove from the Supreme Court the dictatorship powers the court now wields over the destinies of this nation. Thus anything the people might do to bring about changes to remedy the intolerable economic conditions prevailing under our decadent system is futile, as long as the majority of the supreme court is composed of people steeped in the reaction of the past. . .

For that reason the conference of liberal leaders which will be held in Chicago over this week end assumes added significance, because these leaders seek to create a political party which will put through economic and social changes demanded by the people, even to the point of limiting the Supreme Court only those powers which the framers of our constitution intended to give them. . .

These leaders realize that the framers of our constitution intended that the inherent powers of government rest with the people and not with any small group of dictators.

Even bitter opponents of the present state administration are finally admitting that Governor Olson and Highway Commissioner Elsberg were right in advocating a normal automobile license fee to protect the state expanding trunk highway system. . .

Senator A. J. Rockne of Zumbrota, long identified by Republicans as the "watchdog of the state treasury", has come out flatly for a return to the license fee prevailing before the reduction made in 1933. Senator Rockne points out that the state cannot continue to issue highway bonds to match federal aid. The only alternative, he says, is to return motor vehicle licenses to their normal level, which he believes is fair to the automobile owner and in the interest of sound state financing.

It shows 1,682 multi-millionaires in this country; 14,827 persons possessing $1,000,000 or over, and 11,012 individuals whose wealth ranges between $500,000 and $1,000,000. . .

This is in line with repeated assertions of those familiar with the financial structure of America that the depression has not reached those of extreme wealth; not only that but profits of big business the past three years have been greater than they had been for quite some time previously. . .

While the standard of living of the average American family has been going downward to the point where even the general health is jeopardized, and with more than twelve million bread winners out of work and frantically in search of employment, there is occasion for reflection in the latest figures compiled by Boyd's City Dispatch.

The Newspaper Guild of the Twin Cities has appealed to labor organizations to help raise funds to assist the strikers of the Wisconsin News, Hearst-owned Milwaukee daily. . .

The Milwaukee strike has continued for 14 weeks, the management of the Wisconsin News having refused to grant members of the editorial staff the right to bargain collectively. The newspaper is being published with the aid of strike breakers. . .

In its resolution appealing for financial assistance, the Twin Cities Newspaper Guild pointed out that the strike is being financed partly by contributions from the 60,000 members of the Milwaukee Federated Trades Council and by locals of the American Newspaper Guild, including the Twin Cities branch.

Motorists who paid to be hauled out of mud holes this spring, or who suffered damages to their cars from bad roads, or who lost valuable time because of road conditions, received a practical lesson in the "bad roads tax" theory. It is a true saying that good roads are cheaper than poor roads. It is more economical for the motorist to pay a reasonable license fee and drive on good roads than to save a few dollars on his license and travel on poor highways.

Approximately 500,000,000 pike fry will have been distributed in 80 Minnesota lakes by the end of this week, according to Dr. Thaddeus Surber, Superintendent of fish propagation.

About 100,000,000 white fish fry have been distributed in Lake Superior and Red Lake. Sucker fry are being planted in lakes suffering a heavy fish loss from winter suffocation to provide food for the game fish that have been introduced.

A much better hatch of pickerel fry is expected this year than last, Dr. Surber said.

TOURISTS WARNED OF FOREST FIRE DANGER

A warning to fishermen and tourists to be careful with their camp fires was issued last week by Grover M. Conzet, director of the division of forestry.

Mr. Conzet said no serious forest fires were expected because of the late moist spring, but warned that a brief dry period might result in a dangerous condition. No serious forest fires have been reported so far.

TAX RICH FOR BOOKS, FRANK GRAHAM URGES

Richmond, Va., (YNS) "Tax the rich to provide libraries for the 45,000,000 Americans who have no access to books."

That was the gist of a talk by Dr. Frank P. Graham, president of the University of North Carolina to the American Library Association in session at Richmond.

"Books are a defense against dictators and demagogues", he stated. "Ideas let loose by old manuscripts broke down and led to new discoveries", Dr. Graham told the delegates.

Declaring that farmers and workers must have facts with which to check the "generalizations of demagogues", Dr. Graham said that the rural South was witnessing a race "between the boll-weevil and the public library, between farm tenantry and social regeneration.

Delinquent Taxes

For those persons who do not have the necessary cash to take ad vantage of the discount law, their attention is called to Chapter 72, 135-1936 Special Session laws. This law provides for cancellation of all penalty and interest when the owner, or anyone who has the right to pay the taxes, confesses judgment for the whole amount of original tax, and pays down one tenth of the amount due. The balance is then spread over nine more annual installments with 4 per cent interest on the unpaid balance and the current tax must not be allowed to go delinquent while the installment contract is in effect. Any delinquent land which will forfeit this year can be saved by making use of the installment law.

Any property that is delinquent for 1933 or a prior year may be placed under the installment law.

Where the 1934 tax is the only one delinquent there is no discount and must be paid in full along with interest and penalty.

For those persons who do not have the necessary cash to take advantage of the discount law, their attention is called to Chapter 72, 135-1936 Special Session laws. This law provides for cancellation of all penalty and interest when the owner, or anyone who has the right to pay the taxes, confesses judgment for the whole amount of original tax, and pays down one tenth of the amount due. The balance is then spread over nine more annual installments with 4 per cent interest on the unpaid balance and the current tax must not be allowed to go delinquent while the installment contract is in effect. Any delinquent land which will forfeit this year can be saved by making use of the installment law.

Any property that is delinquent for 1933 or a prior year may be placed under the installment law.

Where the 1934 tax is the only one delinquent there is no discount and must be paid in full along with interest and penalty.

Delinquent Taxes

For those persons who do not have the necessary cash to take advantage of the discount law, their attention is called to Chapter 72, 135-1936 Special Session laws. This law provides for cancellation of all penalty and interest when the owner, or anyone who has the right to pay the taxes, confesses judgment for the whole amount of original tax, and pays down one tenth of the amount due. The balance is then spread over nine more annual installments with 4 per cent interest on the unpaid balance and the current tax must not be allowed to go delinquent while the installment contract is in effect. Any delinquent land which will forfeit this year can be saved by making use of the installment law.

Any property that is delinquent for 1933 or a prior year may be placed under the installment law.

Where the 1934 tax is the only one delinquent there is no discount and must be paid in full along with interest and penalty.

LOCALS TAKE KITTSON FOR 4 TO 14 WIN

Red Lake Falls to Seek Revenge Here Next Sunday Afternoon

Kittson took a severe beating at the hands of the locals in the first home game of the Northern Minnie league played here last Sunday. Robinson continues to look good on the mound for the local aggregation and Bakke is proving to be an efficient man behind the bat. The game was somewhat marred by errors, both teams chalking up a total of eight of which the locals committed five. The final score was Kittson 4, Thief River Falls 14. Piltier, the Kittson second sacker drove out a home run in the sixth. Three baggers were garnered by Lee, Elde, Piltier and Parker.

Red Lake Falls will play here next Sunday and are out to get revenge for the 5 to 6 trimming the locals handed them two weeks ago in the first league game.

Results of other league games last Sunday were: Red Lake Falls 11, Garnes 8; Oklee 7, Goodridge 2; Plummer 4, St. Hilaire 5.

Bonus Won't Be Bar To State Relief

War veterans receiving bonus payments this month can use the additional funds for essential expenditures without being taken from direct relief rolls, the state executive council decided Wednesday. The explanation of notices received by former servicemen from the state war veterans' relief agency was made after a veterans' delegation headed by Alderman Edwin Hudson of Minneapolis, said they understood that relief would be denied by reason of bonus payments. It was explained that the notice was intended to explain that if the adjusted compensation is not used wastefully, direct relief will be continued. Executive council members emphasized that in no instance will any move be made to deny relief to the veterans or their families who need it.

Reduce the cost of the state government, was the text of the speech that Mr. Martin Nelson, republican candidate for Governor, delivered in the Municipal Auditorium Monday evening. He spoke to an audience of between 500 to 600 people.

Mr. Nelson made a very strong attack upon the present parties in office, and charged them with a wantom expenditure of the public monies . He maintained that the present incumbents had increased the bonded indebtedness of the state to 129 million dollars, and had raised the tax rate from 6 mills in 1931 to the present rate of 13.57 mills. They were responsible for the large deficit that the state of Minnesota had to operate under during the past few years, charged Mr. Nelson.

HYPNOTIC GIRLS PILFER FARMER AND GETS $950

Two Gypsy Women Picked Up in Gypsy Camp Near Lenby

OFFICERS POSSE MAKES ARRESTS

Culprits Lodged in Local City Jail But Money is Not Found

"They hypnotized me", Anton Anderson, farmer residing six miles east of the city said as he reported having his pockets picked of two wallets containing a total of $950 by two gypsy women on Tuesday afternoon. Two immigration officers, the chief of police, the sheriff and sundry sheriffs and deputies from other counties apprehended the culprits in a gypsy camp near Lengby, but the money has not as yet been recovered.

Mr. Anderson with several others was standing in Lokken's harness shop at about 2:30 Tuesday afternoon when two gypsy women entered and immediately set to work on Anderson. They punched him here and there, in the ribs and in the small of the back repeating "you seek here"—"you seek there". Having by this method located the pockets in which he carried his wallet they concentrated on his tonsils. Both working at the same time, blowing hot breaths into his face while he tried to wiggle away and averted his face. "I didn't notice that they took my pocketbooks, " Mr. Anderson said, "they must have hypnotized me". Hypnotized or not the women left with his wallet and Anderson was glad to be rid of them until the harness maker suggested that he make sure they had not pilfered his pockets.

Science Brings Modern Refrigeration To Farms Via the Little Old Kerosene Lamp

You don't have to live in the city to enjoy all the advantages of the finest of modern refrigeration. Believe it or not, science has developed a system whereby you can get ice from a little kerosene lamp, and thus made positive, controlled refrigeration possible for any farm home for only about three cents a day.

Heat from a small kerosene lamp circulates the refrigerant, which is cooled by ordinary air. It requires no electric current....no water....no daily attention. This utter simplicity of operation is the reason for its remarkable economy.... one filling of kerosene from one to one and one half gallons lasts from a week to ten days. It insures steady cold 24 hours a day, day in and day out, and is absolutely silent. There are no moving parts to wear out.

And so, one more of the disadvantages of farm life has disappeared and the farm wife can be free from the trouble and inconvenience and waste of old fashioned running forth and back between the well-house and the kitchen, lowering pails and buckets, or bustling paw off to town in the old fliver for ice to make ice cream or sherbet when company comes unexpectedly as so often happens on the farm Kerosene refrigeration brings to the farm home all the conveniences and economy of modern city refrigeration and with it, of course, all those worthwhile modern features that speed kitchen work and make possible ice cubes at all times, a whole world of delicious frozen desserts and tempting salads to refresh tillers of the soil and animal husbandmen on hot days.

Agency for these modern Aladdin lamps have been taken by the Red Lake Ice and Fuel company of this city and a varied line of fine enameled models of this new farm convenience is on display in their salesroom.

Six Seek Representative Positions in the 65th District

By R. M. Aalbu

Forty-five candidates of the three major parties for state offices and congress in the 9th Dist. seek an opportunity to battle again in the fall elections as the Primary rolls around Monday. There are ten contestants on the farmer-labor ticket, where four have filed for governor, two for U. S. senator and two for each lieutenant governor and railroad and warehouse commissioner. R. T. Buckler is unopposed for congress and does not appear on the ticket. The republican party is having a major battle between Mrs. Thos. Schall and Teddie Christianson for the nomination for U. S. senator with the outcome in some doubt but with the odds on "Tight Teddy". Four seek the lieutenant governor nomination. Five seek the attorney general post and three are desirous of going to congress. Otter Tail county has a corner on the republican congressional timber, evidently, for all three entries are from that county. Ole "behind the plow" Sageng, old and somewhat the worse for wear is again a candidate and two younger men, Elmer Haugen of Pelican Rapids and C. J. Wittbecker of Fergus Falls are out to give him

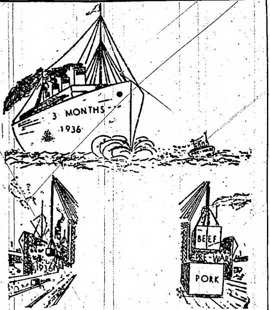
Meat Imports Increase



How other nations must be chuckling over the good market we have opened to them this year, says the Livestock Market Digest issued by the Central Co-Operative Association, farmer-owned livestock selling agency of South St Paul. Imports of foreign meats into this country are rapidly increasing and exports are dropping to almost record low levels.

During the first three months of this year, imports of beef and veal amounted to 24,429,000 pounds as compared with 18,257,000 pounds for the same period last year. Annual imports of beef and veal prior to 1914 averaged less than 500,000 pounds, or about 125,000 lbs. for a three-month period.

Pork imports during the first three months this year totaled 7,132,000 pounds compared with 1,108,000 pounds a year ago. In prewar years, the annual importations of pork amounted to around 500,000 pounds, or about 125,000 lbs. per quarter.

Exports of beef and veal during the first three months this year were 2,733,000 pounds contrasted to annual exports amounting to around 300,000,000 pounds or about 150,000,000 pounds for a three month period.

Exports of pork during the same period were 13,303,000 pounds. Prior to the World War, average annual exportations of pork amounted to from 500,000,000 to 700,000,000 pounds. This is equivalent to about 150,000,000 pounds per quarter.

GOOD PHEASANT CROP PREDICTED

Minnesota sportsmen may look forward to an unusually fine crop of pheasants this year in the opinion of Frank Blair, superintendent of game propagation.

Mr. Blair says that hatching conditions in the southern part of the state have been nearly perfect and that pheasants are due to stage a real comeback in 1936.

The fact that hay is not yet ripe for cutting, Mr. Blair, added, means that few nests will be destroyed by mowing machines.

A total of more than 8,000 pheasant eggs are now in incubation at the Madelia Game Farm, Mr. Blair said. Quail eggs are being hatched at the Blair Game Farm at Mound.

WALTON LEAGUE TO HAVE GAME FARM

The Red Wing chapter of the Izaak Walton League has started a game farm of its own with the assistance and advice of Frank Blair, propagation expert of the Division of Game and Fish.

About 300 ringneck pheasant eggs were purchased this year and are being hatched in the commercial incubator at Red Wing. Of the birds produced 75 or 100 will be used for breeding purposes. The remainder will be released in Goodhue county.

WEDDING, SILVER AND GOLDEN ON SAME DAY

New Ulm—A wedding, silver wedding anniversary, and golden wedding anniversary were celebrated by a groom, his parents and grandparents respectively at New Ulm recently, when Floyd Guldan and Miss Marian Macho were joined in matrimony. Exactly twenty-five years ago, John Guldan and Barbara Seifert Guldan were married in Morgan. And exactly 50 years ago, John Seifert and Katherine Leibl were joined in holy matrimony in the little village of Przeheischen, Behemia, Austria. The grandparents of the groom came to America 10 years after his last named marriage Mr. and Mrs. Seifert, Sr. are 72 and 69 years old, have six living children, 10 grandchildren and one great-grandchild. Following the triple celebration, the parents and grandchildren were guests of honor at the home of the bride's parents.

BUNNER KNOCKS PLAYER OUT, BALL BREAKS JAW

Howard Lake—Insult and more injury was added to injury to "Stub" Massey, second baseman on the Howard Lake baseball team, in a game at Darwin recently. A runner coming from first base struck him in the side with his fist breaking one of his ribs and knocking him out. As "Stub" was falling after being struck, the catcher threw the ball to him and struck him on the chin, breaking the jaw bone, knocking out three teeth and shoving the three molars back under the tongue where the tongue cord was cut. Massey's jaw bone was wired into place, and the next day went back to school for two state board examinations, but the strain was too much for him and he developed a high fever, which forced him to bed for a few days.

101 YEAR OLD CLOCK IS SERVING 4TH GENERATION

Chaska—The rhythmic tick-tock of what truly might be termed a "great-grandfather's clock" is being heard today in the home of P. T Robinson at Chaska. The clock which is still serving efficiently a fourth generation in the Robinson home is 101 years old. It was purchased by a Pennsylvania Dutchman in 1835 and sometime later during the opening up of the west was carried by covered wagon to Illinois. After some years in Springfield, Ill., the veteran timepiece was brought to Chaska. Of hand carved design, the clock has no springs. It is operated by weights.

TAKEN TO JAIL ON OWN SEARCH WARRANT

Little Falls—A joke can be carried too far—in fact it landed one Little Falls woman in the sheriff's office the other day. Living in a two family house, she missed a couple of small rugs, and it is not surprising that she looked askance at her neighbor. Suspicion piled on suspicion, and she finally got out a search warrant. The rugs were not found in the neighbor's apartment, but they were found in the lad's own rooms, where a member of the family had hidden them under a bureau. But the search warrant specifically stated that in case of disclosure the articles and the person possessing them must be seized, taken to the sheriff's office, and proper disposition made of the case. So the Mrs. and her rugs were hustled off to court on the basis of her own search warrant! The case was "settled" without difficulty!

HAVE HAD YOUNGSTER IN SCHOOL 36 YEARS

Little Falls—When Woodrow Felix got his diploma from the Little Falls high school last week it marked the first time in 36 years that Mr. and Mrs. Paul Felix have not had a youngster going to school in Little Falls. In September 1900, they sent their oldest to primary school. Since then eight other shave launched out in quest of an education

Increase White Pine Blister Rust Crews

The number of men working on blister rust control in Minnesota was increased from 131 to 370 during May and more than 100 additional employees are to be added to the crews in June, according to L. B. Ritter, in charge of state blister rust control.

White pine stands are being mapped to indicate their value and the approximate cost of their protection from blister rust. Picked men are examining the gardens and farmyards of Minnesota's white pine area for the European or cultivated black current, the most dangerous carrier of white pine blister rust.

The crews examine the pine stands to be protected for currants and gooseberries, and bushes found are uprooted and hung in trees and brush to die.

The state Forestry Division nursery at Badoura and the new U. S. Forest Service nursery at Eveleth have been examined for blister rust. A small crew is treating infected trees in Chester Park in Duluth, where a large amount of infection is present.

Younger Democrats On the State Ticket

St. Paul—Four Younger Democrats are on the regular "Roosevelt Democratic ticket," sponsored by the Democratic State convention of 3,000 delegates held in St. Paul April 21, and to be voted upon in the primary election June 15.

The Younger Democrats on the ticket are Patrick J. Delaney of St. Paul for United States senator; Fred A Curtis of South St. Paul for governor; Thomas Gallagher of Minneapolis, for attorney general, and Carl Hennemann of St. Cloud for secretary of state.

All four of these candidates have been active in the Younger Democratic organization of Minnesota since its inception and have taken a leading part in its activities.

The entire ticket of which they are members is composed of relatively young candidates. Mayor A. C. Knudson of Detroit Lakes, who is seeking the Democratic nomination for lieutenant governor, being the oldest in age on the ticket. The average age of all the candidates on the slate is about 40 years and individual candidates range in age from 31 to 55 years old.

The entire so-called Roosevelt ticket sponsored by the St. Paul convention consists of Delaney, Curtis, Gallagher, Hennemann, Knudson, Mrs. Ida McCabe Kayser of St Peter for state treasurer, and C. H. Jacobson of Fergus Falls for railroad and warehouse commissioner.

Income Tax Is A Replacement Tax

"The Income Tax is a School Tax" asserted Edgar E Sharp, Attorney of Moorhead and president of the Minnesota School Board Association, in a radio talk Monday evening, May 25, over WCCO on the Minnesota Education Association's North Star School program.

Mr. Sharp predicted that the income tax will increase from year to year and may be expected to further relieve the tax burden on the local school district. He pointed out that the first distribution of the income tax funds for the year 1933 gave each school district $5.00 per pupil between the ages of eight and sixteen; the 1934 income tax furnished $7.50 per pupil, and that the 1935 funds will probably afford a distribution of $8.50 per pupil to each school district.

In answer to queries made by Supt. S. G. Reinertsen, Moorhead, Mr. Sharp stated that the monies thus received by the school districts must be used first to pay up any bonded or other indebtedness and that when districts have no such debts, the money may be used to pay current expenses and to reduce and replace levies on real and personal property.

That all those genuinely interested in Minnesota's educational system are unanimous in supporting the slogan "The Income Tax is a School Tax" was the conclusion of Mr. Sharp. A saxaphone quartet of the Sleepy Eye schools under the direction of W. M Peterson, contributed the music on this program.

The last program of the North Star School Series was given on Monday evening, June 1 over WCCO when President Frank D. McElroy of Mankato State Teachers College spoke on "State Aid 61 percent or 100 percent?' A mixed chorus from the Mountain Lake schools under the direction of Herbert Dittbrenner sang. Walter E. Englund, M.E.A. field director was in charge.

JOHN A. WEEKS COMPLETES PRIMARY CAMPAIGN

Representative John A. Weeks, candidate for the Republican nomination for Attorney General, has just completed a vigorous Primary campaign which has taken him into nearly every part of the state. He spoke at various meetings and Republican rallies, and contacted party leaders and workers in most of the counties. Well known thruout the state because of his work in the Legislature the past eight years, he has many friends who are enthusiastically supporting him and predict his nomination. 60 Percent of Accidents Are Charged to Alcohol

(By Mell W. Hobart, Secretary of Ministers Life and Casualty Union)

No adequate effort is being made nationally to bring out the facts as to the relation of liquor to the murder that is being committed on the highways. Here and there enlightened studies are being made. Dr H. A. Heise of Milwaukee has reported an analysis of 119 auto accidents which resulted in the injury or death of 216 persons. He states that these persons represented a fair distribution of urban, rural and tourist drivers. His study revealed that 80 per cent of the accidents in which 75 per cent of the injured or killed met their fate, involved drivers who had been drinking.

The news press and magazines could help this situation immensely if they would bear down on the necessity of accurate official records, and then print the facts. But they won't.

We live so close to this murder mill that we no longer see it. If it were only dramatic! Suppose that on the first day of the month there had occurred a dozen fearful railroad wrecks, each killing a hundred people, maiming hundreds of others. Twelve hundred people killed in one day, thousands wounded; relief trains speeding; press scare heads screaming; stories of the blood, the horror, the stark dead; of the shrieks, the groans, and the worse than dead. What public wrath would arise against the criminal carelessness if 60 per cent of the engineers and flagmen had been drinking!

It would take 30 such days of tragedy to equal what America is actually doing every year with the automobile, and drink plays a big part in the carnage. 36,400 killed, and almost a million injured!

No machine or contrivance, or luxury ever invented is worth that price. If man cannot control the machine he has made, he had better destroy it entirely. The auto outbutchers war. Its control is America's major moral and economic problem. Its solution involves colossal undertakings. It is a herculean task which demands immediate, courageous and rigorous action.

OUR CIVIC PRIDE

The city of Thief River Falls takes great pride in its looks. During the past several years the council has proceeded with condemnation proceedings to acquire lots in various parts of the city for park purposes, establishing a park almost within the confines of the business district and has acquired a lot in the auditorium block because it was occupied by a scrapiron pile and hide warehouse. The owner received for his property far less than he had paid into the city coffers in taxes. Which, of course, was too bad, but, our civic pride could not tolerate such an institution right next door to the court house and adjoining the city auditirium. We mention these things, not in a spirit of criticism, but rather in a spirit of commencation. We feel that the council has taken the proper steps in these matters. It demonstrates that the city fathers possess a lot of civic pride and will, if it is necessary, condemn private property in order to protect our city from unsightly spots.

We would therefore ask the council what steps they believe the residents of Riverside avenue and adjacent territory would be justified in taking to rid themselves of the very obvious nuisance created by the city sewage disposal from where it enters the river below the dam and south thru the Riverside avenue district. Certainly the residents along this avenue have cause for complaint, and certainly they can hardly be expected to put up with it year after year without some action being taken to remedy the situation.

We are sure that if the council will take a trip down Riverside avenue and see the fine homes, a credit to the city, which line this, the front entrance to Thief River Falls, they will agree that the time for a definite plan to clean up the river at this point is arrived. We have built and are building playhouses, parks, golf courses and a municipal building. Now let us take some definite steps to protect our public health by adequate sewage disposal and a clean water supply.

WHY MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP?

At this time when light and power rates are such moot questions it seems to us, that it would be well to consider the basic principles underlying the establishment of public ownership; particularly municipal ownership of light and power plants.

Usually the establishment of collective enterprises, whether they be co-operative creameries or municipal light plants come about thru one or both of two basic situations. Either the demand for service is so limited that the field is not a lucrative investment for private capital, or the intelligence of the people of the community, as in Thief River Falls, is so advanced that they have reasons to believe that they can efficiently conduct a business enterprise, rendering service to the citizens, at a price based on cost of production, establishment and maintainance of the plant.

However, the municipal plant in Thief River Falls has become the goose that lays the golden egg and returns from the plant are, and have been used for other city purposes rather than being returned to the users thru lower rates made possible by lower production costs. At the present time the consumers of electric energy are paying an excessive sales tax (and naturally the larger the user the more heavily he is penalized) to the disadvantage of the local citizens and property owners and to the advantage of absentee property owners.

Light and power rates in Thief River Falls should be based on cost of production, which in 1933 was approximately 1.18 cents per kilowatt, plus the percentage required to meet bonds and interest for the establishment and expansion of the plant and such added charge as may be necessary to provide a sinking fund sufficient to replace equipment as it may become obsolete or worn out. Such a rate structure would probably provide electric energy to the citizens at a cost of 3 cents to 5 cents per kilowatt. And it would reflect to the benefit of the people who make and maintain the community; the people who operate and conduct business establishments, the professional men and the workers in stores and manufacturing plants; who build and maintain churches, homes and civic enterprises; who are making Thief River Falls a bustling, thriving community. If it should then be necessary to raise additional funds for police and fire protection and street maintainance, such funds should be raised from taxes on real and personal property. The average local property owner would be more than compensated thru the lower price paid for electric energy, while the absentee property owner would be paying the just price for the services that enhance the speculative value of his property.

NO MAN'S LAND

With its last decision before adjournment the United State supreme court last week, with one sweep, wiped out the New York Women's Minimum Wage law and, with it similar laws in 16 other states, among them Minnesota's. With this decision, the court has clearly indicated that under the constitution there is a "No Man's Land" where neither the national nor the state governments have authority to legislate. To the laymen the court's decision has branded it as ridiculous. To the careful student of law and the constitution it has clearly shown that as an instrument by which a modern nation is to be governed, the constitution is so outmoded that if it is to continue as the nation's basic law the final outcome can only mean revolution. For just as surely as the American masses become convinced that their government and the basic laws exist, not for the benefit of the people, but for the sole protection of a small propertied class, they will emulate their forefathers and cast off into a puddle of blood that which has become a yoke of oppression.

When the supreme court declared the NRA unconstitutional, it held among other things that congress has no power under the constitution to regulate hours, wages or conditions of employment in industry. Again when invalidating the Guffey coal act the court emphasized the fact that congress can not interfere with conditions of employment which is purely intrastate and therefore is powerless to legislate in regard to the mining of coal. The court called attention to Article ten of the constitution which expressly states that "The powers not delegated to the United States by the constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states, respectively, or to the people".

In its opinion invalidating the New York Women's Minimum-Wage Law last week, the court majority cites Article I section 10 of the constitution which states that "No state shall enter into any treaty....or....law impairing the obligation of contract...." and that therefore "the state is without power by any form of legislation to prohibit, change, or nulify contracts between employers and adult women workers, as to amount of wages to be paid".

Chief Justice Hughes and Justices Stone, Brandeis and Cordozo disagreed and in the words of Hughes, while the freedom of contract is important "it is also necessary to prevent its abuse, as otherwise it could be used to override all public interests and thus in the end destroy the very freedom of opportunity which it is designed to safeguard."

The net result of the decision of the court is to leave American Labor which has built up thru years of effort some semblance of protection for women working in industry, completely out on a limb so far as legislation goes. The only method that is now left open to Labor is to enforce its demands thru the strike. The far-reaching consequences and cost in broken heads that may result is not pleasant to contemplate.

As has happened so often in the past the court again divided 4 and 5 and again the economic views of the members of the court was very evicently the deciding factor. But aside from this fact, when a document upon which the government of a nation is founded is so ambiguous that time after time nine eminent jurists can divide 4 to 5 on its interpretation it is time to replace that document with one that is up-to-date and clear in its mandates, yet flexible enough to meet the needs of a modern nation.

The only solution, the only way in which this legal No Man's Land that has been created can be abolished is thru a complete revision of the basic law and it should be the business of the major parties at this time to place before the people their solution of the difficulty. In the degree that they face this issue, and in the method by which they would remedy the anomalous situation they will be judged by the voters in the election this fall.

WHAT IS NATIONAL DEFENSE?

(National Council for Prevention of War)

Congress has appropriated sums for the army and navy departments that during the next year will touch the $1,100,000,000 mark. Such expenditures in time of peace were vigorously condemned by members of the House and Senate and by such organizations as the National Council for Prevention of War as placing America squarely in an arms race, the end of which has always been war.

Among the statesmen protesting this unprecedented war budget was Senator Elmer A. Benson, Farmer-Laborite of Minnesota. He pointed out, and has since emphasized the fact, that the United States has no policy whatever to guide congress in spending money for national defense. Indeed, he asserts, although the appropriations are made in the name of "adequate national defense," no one has ever come forward to say what "adequate national defense" is, or how much of what kind of military and naval strength the country needs to protect us from invasion. He charges that the lack of a defense policy and the lack of a definition of defense leads to ever-growing demands on our treasury to support an army and navy for unknown purposes, and results in grave misunderstanding here and around the world of what our army and navy are for.

To correct this present situation, Senator Benson has introduced a resolution asking the President to appoint a commission of civilians, who will survey the nation's defense needs and lay down a defense policy in keeping with our avowed expressions of peace. In doing so, the Senator is asking only what the Democratic party pledged in its 1932 platform, which called for just such a survey.

It is beyond hope that Congress will take up the Benson resolution at this session. But before our legislators in Washington act on the army and navy bills next year, they ought to find out what kind of defense is necessary, and how well it is being provided. In other words, we the taxpayers, ought to know if we are getting our money's worth.

CHIEF JUSTICE DEVANEY DISSENTS

(State News)

Commenting on the six to one decision of the State Supreme Court which held the Corporate Excess Tax Law invalid, Chief Justice John P. Devaney, the lone dissenter declared that, "the majority opinion is a usurpation of the function of the legislature by the judiciary and is a manifestation of the fast growing evil of judicial autocracy".

This is a mighty serious indictment against our State Supreme Court which, not unlike other high courts in this country, still shows a lack of determination to protect the rights of the people when the interests of predatory wealth is in jeopardy. It is high time that the people of this country took more than a passing interest in the election of the judiciary. As a general rule, the voters follow the recommendations of the bar associations, invariably dominated by corporation lawyers who rarely come in contact with the masses and who know little and care less about their welfare.

Two of the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court, Associate Justices Andrew Holt and Royal A. Stone, who voted to invalidate the Corporate Excess Tax Law which in effect will save millions of dollars for Minnesota corporations, are seeking reelection this November. Fortunately, the people have a splendid opportunity in the forthcoming election to repudiate this reactionary opinion approved by the high court in its majority decision

The Black Legion Happened Here

From The New York Post

Every week brings evidence that Sinclair Lewis was right: that a dangerously large section of the population of the United States is fertile seed for Fascism.

The most shocking disclosure to date is the existence of the "Black Legion." The claim that this armed secret organization has 135,000 members in Michigan is probably exaggerated and the statement that there are 6,000,000 members in the United States is certainly absurd. Nevertheless, it has been established that the "Black Legion is a large and powerful force in several sections of the nation.

Even the "Black Legion's" responsibility for the cold-blooded murder of at least one man is not as important as the fact that the terrorist organization arose out of economic causes and uses "partriotism" and religious bigotry as its rallying points.

In its background the "Black Legion" reproduces part of the familiar pattern which led to the present German and Italian governments. That if political program called for a dictatorship is significant of its similarity to European terror movements like the Brown Shirts and the Fascist street gangs.

The Detroit suburbs where it is strongest are those filled up during the 1920's by automobile workers recruited from the South, especially from the benighted and impoverished regions of Kentucky, Tennessee and Mississippi.

Ignorant, unable to adjust themselves readily to their new life, particularly to the insecurity of industrial employment, these men tended to band together for protection.

It is not surprising that shrewd organizers were able to restore a lost feeling of self-importance by pledging them to attack "Negroes, Communists, Jews and Catholics" and to defen "the laws and constitution of the United States.

The fact that the first purpose is directly counter to the spirit of the latter will startle only those who expect consistency of such movements

The organization has indulged in threats, beatings and, apparently killings. That it has recruited its members by "shanghai" methods is shown by the story of an ex-Legion member. It is significant that at least two of their victims were active in the automobile unions.

The fierce competition for jobs, the failure of the labor unions to organize these men with rural backgrounds, the labor policies of the industries in the Detroit region left them a prey to those who knew how to play upon their prejudices, their insecurity and their ignorance. The men who later became Hitler's Brown Shirts passed through comparable experiences before they were enlisted under the swastika through similar methods.

Detroit authorities have asked assistance of the United States Department of Justice in investigating the "Black Legion". The federal government should respond immediately. The sooner this thing is dragged out into the open the less harm it will be able to do.

America doesn't want and should not tolerate secret armed terrorist bands. But it will not be enough to break up this particular organization and imprison its officers. What of similar organizations which are reported operating in the Mid West, in the Far West, the South and, to a lesser extent, in the East? What of the Klan in Queens? What about Tampa?

For 100 years organizations of this nature have played a sinister part in American life. Although they seem remote in their principles from economic aims, it is notable that they rise to greater heights during periods of economic stress and change such as those which preceded and followed the Civil war and that through which we have passed since the World war.

Was all well with the nation during the "prosperous" 1920s which produced the Ku Klux revival? Is the great industrial city of Detroit "fundamentally sound" today when such numbers of its workers will band together in armed mobs based upon terrorism and bigotry?

Or does insecurity here, as elsewhere, produce reversions to un-American principles?

Lloyd George On Munitions

London—Testifying before the British Commission, which is conducting an investigation of the British armaments industry, similar to that held in the U. S by the Nye Committee of the Senate, Lloyd George recently demanded that the munitions industry be made a government monopoly.

It is "not a healthy state of things that a large and influential body of men should have a direct pecuniary interest in war," he declared. The recent boom in armament shares when the enormous British rearming program was announced, he cited as "a startling demonstration" of the peril involved in permitting the private armament industry to continue.

Speaking in the light of his experience as Minister of Munitions and Prime Minister during the World War, Lloyd George charged that the "insidious propaganda" of the armament companies was partly responsible for the Anglo-German naval rivalry which helped to bring on the War.

Murderous Fascism

The black-shirted Fascist terror in Italy during 1927 to 1932 is graphically depicted in the following figures:

3,500 persons were tried by the special Fascist tribunal.

2,000 were sentenced to more than 12,000 years' imprisonment.

Many were exiled, banned and killed in the dungeons of Mussolini's empire.

In 1934 prison sentences totalling 1,735 years were meted out to the opponents.

In 1935 the number of trials against Anti-Fascists showed a pronounced upward curve which was climaxed early in 1936 by hundreds of new arrests, death and heavy prison sentences.

No one knows how many persons have been killed by the Fascisti, writes George Selces in his book, "awdust Caesar". "Labriola, former Minister of Labor announced that from the time Mussolini went into the employ of the employer's associations in 1920, until he entered Rome in 1922, his squadristi murdered 4,100 non-Fascists of which full case records exist. There are also lists of thousands of victims in the ensuing years of Fascist rule. Mussolini's one reply has been that the Bolsheviki in Russia killed more."

Soil Loss Appalling

By C. O. Rost
Professor of Soils
University Farm, St. Paul

Although American agriculture is relatively young, the estimated removal of soil by erosion is appalling. The United States Department of Agriculture has estimated that 100 million acres of crop land have been essentially destroyed in so far as agriculture is concerned. This is equal to 625,000 farms of 160 acres each—an area capable of supporting a farm population of three million, plus, of couse, an additional urban population. In size, such an area is about equal to that of Wisconsin, Illinois and Iowa combined.

It is estimated, also, that another 125 million acres has lost most of its top-soil, and 100 million acres more has lost enough surface soil to impair its productivity.

The total area affected by erosion amounts to 325 million acres, and if located in a single region, would equal the combined areas of Minnesota, Wisconsin, Illinois, Iowa, and South Dakota. That is about 17 per cent of continental United States and represents roughly 30 per cent of the nation's agricultural land.

LEGS PARALYZED BY LIGHTNING SHOCK

Blooming Prairie—Sharp lightning and the resultant crashing thunder of a storm caused residents of Blooming Prairie to jump nervously recently, but one bolt had the opposite effect on a brakeman near the C. M. & St. Paul railway depot. During one of the sharpest flashes, the lighting struck near the depot and the brakeman standing nearby had both legs partly paralyzed. Gradually he regained feeling in his limbs, stumbled around for a while and then the paralyzed condition left.

Minute Sermon

By Dr. Crawford Grays

"The operation will take about an hour," said the surgeon as he beckoned me into the operating room.

He began washing his hands and getting his sterilized garments on. A nurse was busy arranging instruments and bottles. The table was wheeled into the room with the patient, and the transfer to the operating table made. An assistant began to give the anaesthetic. The doctor was drawing on his gloves. The patient was breathing easier and the sheet was drawn over the body The skin near the point to be opened was painted with something that looked like iodine. The surgeon examined the heart. I looked at my watch. Twenty minutes had passed. The knife is picked up the incision made. Will it be an hour from now?

Every action was definite and quick. Removal of blood soaked gauze, change of instruments, removal of cause for operation, sewing up incision. The surgeon waved his hand to attendants. They are moving the patient from the room. Fifty minutes had gone. Twenty minutes in preparation (and the years of preparation in the university) and thirty minutes for the operation. Preparation counts.

The Washington Commentator

By E. C. Stengelsen

THE REPUBLICANS ARE INDIGINANT!

Henry P. Fletcher, Chairman of the Republican National Committee, is riled again! . . . Which of itself, however, isnt news. For it has become a more or less chronic state with Henry. Somebody—or something—is always getting into his hair.

* * * *

But while it may not be generally known, this is really a part of his job. He must keep a keen eye and an alert ear on everything that goes on about him, and promptly seize upon the slightest pretext for rousing public feeling against the Democrats.

* * * *

Not so much as a sparrow may fall to the ground—a Republican sparrow, that is, pushed off the branch by a Democrat—but that the Chairman must yell at the top of his lungs. For who knows but that one of these days, he'll accidentally hit upon some transgression which will arouse the ire of the voters sufficiently so they will rush to the polls in November and declare the whole Democratic regime null and void.

So Henry's constant watchword is and must be—Bigger and better indignation!

* * * *

The Liberty Leaguers have loyally helped him to the best of their ability. Every time he has let loose a howl, they have dutifully joined in the chorus. Then all have squinted furtively about to see how the voters took it.

* * * *

They've kicked so much, the whole crew of them, that it has become almost a habit. One suspects that even if they lost both legs, they'd still go right on kicking.

* * * *

What got Henry up on his ear this time was a letter he received from Miss Lida Frost, of Lebanon, Ohio.

'Lida, it appears, was one of the fortunates singled out to receive a copy of a certain pamphlet, known as 'Uncensored', mailed out by Republican campaign headquarters.

* * * *

Everybody has heard of 'Uncensored', of course. But on the chance that there may be readers who are ignorant on this important score, let it be said that 'Uncensored' is a glittering literary gem which will doubtless take its place in our cultural history beside 'Pilgrims Progress', 'Paradise Lost' and The Bible.

It tells all about how noble the Republicans are, and what rogues the Democrats are.

Quite possibly Henry himself wrote a good share of it. Your commentator is pleased to imagine thus, at least. It would be sufficient guarantee of high merit.

* * * *

Anyway, when Lida opened the package, she found indications that her precious copy of 'Uncensored' had been tampered with. A whole page had been mutilated. It was quite unreadable.

Now, nothing of this sort had ever happened before. The Sears-Roebuck catalogue, for example, was never even so much as mussed when it arrived. Invariably it reached her in all its pristine beauty, complete and intact from harness section to index.

* * * *

She knew at once, of course, who was guilty of the outrage. The Democrats, naturally! For wasn't it they who ran the postoffice now! So who but they, then, could be at the bottom of it!

* * * *

The young lady determined to do something about it. For she comes of a family who do something about nearly everything. Quite likely her ancestors came over on the Mayflower. . . or maybe even earlier than that! At least, they came over!

So she sat down, took her pen in hand, and wrote Henry a few lines.

* * * *

And Henry, too, took his pen in hand. He wrote James Aloysius Farley, who is not only Postmaster General, but is also chairman of the Democratic National Committee.

And he didn't start out chummily with . . .

"Dear Jim: As one chairman to another, etc."

No, quite the contrary. He was very stern and frowning.

* * * *

Henry let on that matters had come to a pretty pass, indeed, when even the Postal Service, under Democratic management, lent itself to scullduggery.

Which may sound strong. But it was, actually, only a mild beginning. As he warmed up, he really laid about him.

Some of the things he said were little less than spine-shivering . . "Interference with individual liberties", for example. Snonrous and majestic phrases fairly rolled out.

Your commentator has read only brief excerpts of the letter. But from its general tone, one expects that he closed with some lofty allusion to the stars and stripes, with, perhaps, a quotation from Patrick Henry thrown in . . . . "Gim'me liberty or gim'me death!" And all because Lida didn't get 'Uncensored' in running order!

* * * *

And what did James Aloysius Farley say in reply? Did he hang his head and promise contritely it would never happen again?

Alas, he didn't show that praiseworthy attitude. On the contrary, he snorted and said the charge was 'asinine'.

Which is, admittedly, no way for one chairmen to talk to another

Though he did say he'd look into it.

* * * *

And there matters rest for the present. James Aloysius is doubtless 'looking into it'; Lida is probably lying awake nights, trying to guess what the mutilated page contained; while Henry is, of course, keeping his political ear alertly to the ground, trying to determine the popular reaction—if any—to his latest indignation fit.

Moderate Drinking

By W. G. Calderwood

By W. G. Calderwood

The opening paragraph in a full page editorial in Collier's magazine reads:

"Public patience with drunken drivers is exhausted. Alcoholic driving is not the chief cause of motorcar accidents, nor even one of the most mportant factors. It is, however, an utterly inexcusable cause of many highway accidents and deaths".

The drunken driver is not the most dangerous alcoholic highway menace, but the drinking, tho not drunken, driver is. As long ago as 1930 Robbins Stoeckel, noted automotive engineer, former state Commissioner of Motor Vehicles of Connecticut, now professo- of highway transportation of Yale University, demonstrated that "The really dangerous driver is the man who has had one or two drinks only, who still thinks, he is in possession of his faculties, but whose driving judgment is impaired. On the highways moderate drinking is more dangerous than immoderate."

Scientists in all of the advanced nations have demonstrated by exhaustive experimentation that Stoeckel's statement is scientifically accurate The man who has consumed only .4 to .6 oz. of alcohol may experience no sensible effect beyond a possible feeling of mild exhileration and well being. But there is a very substantial slowing down of muscular and nervous action and correlation, easily measured in the scientific laboratory. The results have been checked and double checked by scientific bodies in Germany, England, Sweden, France, the U. S., and other nations. Dr. Evert Kendig, Dean of the Temple School of Pharmacy, states that "One drink of whisky or one pint of beer will increase the time from the eye to the brakes up to as much as four-fifths of a second". Even one-fifth of a second may spell the difference between a trivial incident and a tragic accident.

Police Commissioner Pickert of Detroit was recently quoted in the press: "The main barrier to safety and safe driving is liquor." A recent study made by Dr. H. A. Heise of Milwaukee revealed the fact "that 80 per cent of the accidents in which 75 per cent of the injured or killed met their fate involved drivers who had been drinking."

Dear Mr. Aalbu:

It is with grave concern and disappointment that I reply to your recent communication in behalf of the Frazier-Lemke Bill. I had not only hoped but sincerely believed that the Bill would pass the House, and that if proper pressure were brought by the farm organizations of the entire country, it might be forced through the Senate.

I feel that its defeat was the most disastrous blow that could be dealt to millions of American farmers who are struggling to save their homes Since it was beaten in the House, by a vote of 235 to 142, of course it will never come before the Senate at this session of Congress. After a valiant fight which has continued since 1930, it seems that we must start the struggle all over again.

Without hesitation, I will say that not only the farmers, but organized labor, professional classes, and the independent businessmen of our vast agricultural areas, all have been bitterly betrayed by the tactics used to bring out the defeat of this Bill.

I hope that this defeat will only serve to arouse a more militant and coordinating movement than we have even had heretofore, and that it will convince the farmers, workers, and independent business men of the country that they must elect state and federal officials and representatives in Congress, who will fight fearlessly for their interests and their rights, if they are ever to have a government responsive to their needs.

Perhaps this defeat of the Frazier-Lemke Bill, at a time when all of our hopes had been built so high, may in the end prove a benefactor to the cause of liberal political thought, by awakening our people to the futility of expecting public benefits from old-party reactionaries, no matter how glowing their promises.

I want to thank you for your interest and effort in behalf of a cause that is lost, I hope, only temporarily.

Sincerely yours,
Elmer A. Benson,
Senator

a run-around for the nomination.

What appeared at first to be a rather lame affair in the democratic ranks is proving to be a first class battle for supremacy between the Ryan-Moonan-Regan faction, and the Wolf supporters. Two years ago, thousands of republicans thinking to further the fusion idea, voted the democratic ticket with the result that the Moonan faction won out. This time however, the shoe seems to be on the other hoof with the possibility being that there is more danger of farmer-laborites voting democratic to help Wolf than there is of republicans entering the democratic election, the GOP having a few primary pains of its own this year. Wolf democrats are encouraging this while farmer-labor campaign managers are fighting desperately to keep their ranks intact and to roll up a big primary vote, first to assure the nomination of Benson, upon whom the Magnus Johnson crowd has waged a relentless fight and second to have a large primary vote to point to. It has its tactical advantages. The Wolf crowd has entered candidates for all offices and the fight is bitter with only one office, that of secretary of state having more than two candidates. In the congressional race the Wolf faction has filed Frank Timm of Beaudette against Martin Brandon the democratic nominee of two years ago. Brandon has the advantage of being Norwegian, better known and having a head start, but Timm has plastered the district with posters and speakers during the past week and the outcome may be doubtful. The ninth district democracy is preponderously Wolf minded and the Timm forces have tacked the Moonan-Regan label on Brandon. Brandon, however, vehemently insists that he is a Roosevelt democrat and not a Moonanite.

Six seek the nomination of justice of the supreme court with four to be nominated. Charles DeReu of Marshall and Joseph Poirier have the farmer-labor endorsement and are expected to be assured places on the ticket. One newcomer has entered for representative in the legislature in the 65th district, namely Andie Peterson of Bagley. The other five entries are veterans. W E. Day, former representative who was gypped out of his seat two years ago in a rather high-handed manner has filed again with farmer-labor endorsement and representative J. O. Melby, his running mate of two years ago is also very much in the race. He too has the F-L endorsement. Marius Waldal, better known as the bucolic statesman and his running mate of two years ago, are again in the race and this time their support is definitely and aboveboard republican. Ed. Baumann the communist entry of two years ago is in again, too. He received 1300 votes two years ago. There seems to be some doubt that he will get the 13 without the ciphers this time.

Two commissioner districts have contests in this county, there being six entries in the first district and four in the third.

Martin A. Nelson

ing a period of fifteen years prior to 1930 the republican office holders, had increased the bonded indebtedness of the state from 3 million dollars to 115 million dollars, and reduced that sum to 88 million dollars by 1930 The Farmer-Labor party had increased that figure to 129 million dollars during the depression of the past six years, he said.

The vast expansion of the highway system and the establishment of the Rural Credits Bureau were the two major projects that helped to increase the bonded indebtedness of the state during the republican reign, he stated.

Mr. Nelson compared the state of Minnesota with some of our neighboring states, such as Iowa, Kansas, Illinois, and Nebraska. He claimed that those states had raised their cash reserves, and deduced their bonded indebtedness during the depression years. In those states they reduced their payroll from 40 to 50 percent. He maintained that Minnesota would have done the same if the republican party had been power.

"The greatest scientific development in government", was the phrase used by Mr. Nelson in his defense of the present Supreme Court system He said that they were a safe guard upon the political officers of the government. That the other departments were too eager to advance, but the Supreme Court held them back at a sane pace, and safe-guarded the citizens against the emotions of the people under stress.

Mr Nelson maintained that there is an ample supply of currency in the United States for the needs of business and trade. What we need to correct the seeming inample supply is a steady and normal circulation of what money we have on hand.

The government has entered into other fields that were never intended to be within the scope of government regulation. We have lost sight of the old American principle of thrift, and when we do that we are bound to increase to unemployment, Mr. Nelson said.

The other speakers on the meeting were Sen. Solstad of Polk county, Ole Sageng and Elmer Haugen of Ottertail county, candidates for the office of congressman from the 9th District, who spoke in behalf of their own candidacy and for the election of Mr. Nelson as Governor.

Mr. Sageng claimed that he had never seen government at such a low ebb as at the present time. He maintained that the business men, professional men and farmers were in the same boat, and had to unite for a common cause.

Mr. Theo Quale, county republican chairman, presided at the meeting.

Gypsies

He immediately communicated with chief of police Al Stenberg, who with the assistance of patrolman Bob Lane and immigration officers Christ Larson and Frank Hogan of Roseau who were in the city, started a search for the women. Sheriffs in all neighboring counties were notified and the alarm was sent out from WDAY at Fargo and over the short wave police radio from the bureau of criminal apprehension at St. Paul. The two immigration officers started out on TH59 and the chief and Lane went north to pick up the trail. No trace being found of them thru Holt nor Middle River, the chief returned to the city and shortly after a phone call from Bagley by one of the immigration officers informed him that the thieves had been traced to a gypsy camp near Lengby.

Sheriff Rambeck had picked up the alarm as it came over the radio at Grand Forks and he was joined by the chief, Lane and Deputy Rasmusson near Erskine. Sheriffs and deputies from Clearwater county and Polk county joined with local officers to form a posse which invaded the gypsy camp containing about 70 people. Everything was quiet until Mr. Anderson who had accompanied the officers identified the two women who had robbed him. From then on seventy gypsies pointed at seventy gypsies assuring the officers that the other fellow was the thief. However the chief put the cuffs on the two women and loaded them up for return to the local kalaboose. The car in which they had been traveling was also confiscated inasmuch as non would admit owning it. The driver who had accompanied the women had disappeared, however. The chief of the tribe assured the officers that this man had left early Tuesday morning and had not returned to the camp.

The women were lodged in jail and are charged with grand larceny in the first degree The chief of the tribe appeared in the city on Wednesday morning and arranged for defense counsel. No trace of the wallets nor their contents was found.

LIGHTS OUT!

"Sentry!" exclaimed the officer of the guard, "you were smoking; I saw the glow of your pipe."

"Me, sir!" returned the sentry. "No, sir!"

"I suppose you don't deny having a pipe?" asked the officer.

"Why, no, sir," replied the sentry. "Here it is."

The officer took it and found that it was cold and empty.

"H'm!" he murmured, walking off. "I must have been mistaken. I could have sworn you were smoking."

When he was out of sight the sentry took out a still warm pipe from another pocket.

"Gee whizz!" he murmured, "the sergeant who enlisted me was right when he said I should have two of everything."

Diagnosis

A man had a severe attack of pneumonia, and the doctor was called in to prescribe for him. After a thorough examination the M. D. said:

"You are a musician, I think, and play a wind instrument."

"Yes."

"That explains everything," continued the doctor. "There is a distinct straining of the lungs, and the larynx is alarmingly inflamed as though by some abnormal pressure. What instrument do you play?"

"The concertina."

Aroused

"And you say you did not strike the plaintiff until he became abusive?"

"That's it, your worship."

"Tell the court what he said."

"That won't excuse your conduct. A man might call me a thief all day, but—"

"Yes," interrupted the defendant, "but perhaps you've never been one, your worship, and you don't know how it roused me."

Broad Economic Progress— The Way It Can Be Achieved

By HAROLD G. MOULTON

President, The Brookings Institution, Washington, D. C.

MUCH current discussion of economic problems is focused too intently on the depression to shed real light on our fundamental difficulties. Today's troubles obscure our view of what happened yesterday and what is likely to happen tomorrow. Actually our economic structure was being undermined by grave maladjustments long before the depression; in our "prosperity" years, millions of American families were poor.

Farmers and people in the small towns scarcely need to be told this. In 1929 and before, agriculture was not prosperous. Farmers had to pay high prices for the things they bought, but got little for what they sold. They were in a depression even then—caught between what looked like irresistible forces and an immovable body.

There are about 54 million farmers and people living in the small towns. In addition, professional men, domestic workers, small shopkeepers and others living in the cities were similarly affected, inasmuch as they could not utilize organized pressure to force upward the return on their services. These with their dependents total about 20 million. While their standards of living perhaps were not actually lowered, most of them realized little gain from the great advance in productive efficiency made in that period.

The diminution in purchasing power of these groups, or its failure to rise, in turn, reacted on others. Business men sold less goods, and workers everywhere found it harder to get jobs. The forces that were retarding the farmer's prosperity were by no means helping the man in the city.

Progress—But Not Enough

It is true that our economic system has brought us living standards higher than those existing anywhere else in the world. Between 1900 and 1930, as an example, per capita income, in terms of what it would buy, increased about 38 per cent, at the same time, working hours were reduced about 13 per cent. But the fact of idle plant capacity indicated that we could have produced more goods and thus raised living standards.

Studies we have made at the Brookings Institution, aided by a grant from the Falk Foundation, of Pittsburgh, throw significant light on this. We made a detailed survey of productive capacity in manufacturing, mining, farming and all the other major divisions of industry, resulting in the finding that our productive plant could have turned out about 20 per cent more than it did.

If nobody had wanted to buy anything, the idle plant would have been easily explained. But, millions of families were not getting nearly enough to satisfy their wants.

Nearly 6 million farm and city families received incomes of less than $1,000; 16 millions received less than $2,000; and 19 millions, or 71 per cent of the total, less than $2,500. More than 54 per cent of farm families got less than $1,000. Of course, in considering farm income the lower living costs of rural areas should be kept in mind. But, no matter where they lived, families trying to pay for food, clothing, medical service, education, etc., on $1,000 were not prosperous.

The extent of unfilled wants may be judged by the fact that nearly all family income in the $2,000 class or lower is spent for ordinary consumption goods—food, shelter, clothes, education, etc. Fifteen million families got less than this figure.

Purchasing Power Must Expand

Our productive efficiency is increasing year by year in normal times. That is, we are learning how to make things more cheaply. But if the people are to buy the added products thus made possible, their purchasing power must grow with production.

Expanding purchasing power cannot be created simply by printing more money. That would just raise prices. And we cannot accomplish much by "sharing wealth or income." Such a program would entail taking income from skilled workers, many farmers, small shopkeepers, government clerks, etc. It would not merely "soak the rich."

Purchasing power can be increased only as we learn how to produce goods and services more efficiency and pass the benefits of that efficiency on to the masses. If we devise a way to make two articles where we formerly made one, and we pass on this gain to the people, purchasing power is actually created—the extra article can be sold.

Higher Wages and the Farmer

Organized labor for many years has tried to obtain the benefits of increased efficiency by pressure for higher wages. This gave certain groups of workers more purchasing power, but the effect on farmers has not been favorable. It has forced them to pay higher prices for manufactured goods or has prevented them from obtaining lower ones. The same was true in large degree of the city dwellers mentioned above who do not work for wages, numbering 20 million. An economic disparity was created between two great segments of our population, raising a serious barrier to economic progress.

But if we permit the fruits of man's inventive genius and technological advance to reach the people in the form of price reductions, no such barriers are raised. All classes benefit alike to the extent that they are consumers; the chief gain is in the low income groups where it is most needed.

To the farmer, it means better houses, tools, food, clothes, and in general a steady rise in his standard of living that he can get no other way.

Price reductions, of course, must not come from wage cuts, if they are to increase purchasing power. But we must reduce prices as we learn to make things more cheaply. This is the way we can expand consumption solidly, year after year, which in turn will call forth larger production. Increased efficiency makes price reductions possible; competition must insure that they actually take place.

Price Stabilization Tendencies

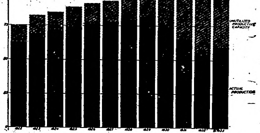
Whereas the period of great technological advance between 1870 and 1890 brought notable price reductions, contributing much to raising living standards, there was little reduction of prices in the similar period of 1922-29. Productive efficiency in manufacturing in the latter era as measured by output per worker, increased about 25 per cent. But forces of price maintenances had become so strong that retail prices in the aggregate remained practically stationary.

Of course, there was competition in many lines, and prices declined accordingly. But this was not true of all producers. Many neglected to face the fact that in the long run they could prosper only as the masses could buy an expanding volume of their goods.

This fact must be faced. We must remove the obstacles to price reductions which now exist, whatever they are. It is the only way that people who live in small towns or on farms, or otherwise do not work for wages, can fully participate in our economic progress. And, unless these do participate, we can have no broad, continued progress.

The failure of industrial prices to decline is primarily responsible for the movement in recent years to attempt an improvement in the farm situation by artificial methods of restricting production, with a view to restoring "price parity" with industry. However helpful such policies may be temporarily, agriculture and industry combined obviously cannot expect to increase the total production of goods and services for the American people as a whole by restricting output and raising prices. National cooperation in the expansion of output, giving to all the people the largest possible consumption, is the paramount necessity.

PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY AND ACTUAL PRODUCTION, 1922-33



This chart illustrates the extent to which we have failed to utilize our full productive capacity. The black area represents what we produced; the shaded area, the additional amount that could have been turned out. Over most of this period, our plant, as a whole could have produced about 20 per cent more than it did, but after 1929 this percentage of non-utilization became much larger.

Davis Defends The Foreign Trade Policy

Administration policies of foreign trade promotion and agricultural production control were vigorously defended by Chester Davis, Administrator of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, June 5 at University Farm, St. Paul, in a meeting attended by 1,000 Minnesota farmers.

Mr Davis has recently returned from a two months' visit to Europe where he studied outlets for United States' farm products. The title of his address was, "Unshackling Our Export Trade."

Declaring that international trade is a two-way deal, requiring the importation as well as the exportation of goods by each nation involved, he pleaded for the retention of present reciprocal trade agreements and the use of the reciprocal trade act for promoting foreign trade.

"Instead of import exclusion or strict bilateral trade balancing, with their by-products of international ill-will, tariff retaliation, reduced trade and regimentation, our government is promoting reciprocal trade agreements through judicious use of the most-favored-nation principle to generalize concessions among the countries of the world," he said. "Generalization is not confined to our own concessions; it is mutual. The countries which enter into reciprocal agreements with us agree to give us the advantages and concessions which they have given or may give to others. This policy leads to better balance of trade and to freer commerce throughout the world, by reducing or eliminating international barriers under which trade now suffers.

"In order to make sure that this country's tariff concessions do not result in importations of quantities so great as to work serious injury to important domestic groups, import or tariff quotas are provided. When a tariff quota is exhausted, further imports come in at the regular rate."

Mr. Davis also urged the retention of production control measures provided by the National Agricultural Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act.

"World conditions have changed so that the old method of letting things drift will neither get back our export trade nor help farmers hold their production at levels that will yield a fair income from what the home market will take," he asserted. "Hence I believe that farmers everywhere will look forward to cooperation beginning in 1938 in making essential adjustments of production through use of these State-Federal (soil conservation) programs which will become available at that time."

Pointing out the weakness of relying on export subsidies alone to promote foreign trade, Mr Davis said;

"Trying to force unlimited quantities of farm products on the world market in its present state will injure farmers far more than help them," he said. "This would only invite retaliations and close up some of the export outlets that still remain to us. The only way the two-price system (separation and sale of surplus abroad so that the price of the remainder of the crop will reflect the benefit of the tariff) can serve producers of major farm crops now is to use it skillfully in conjunction with production control. In this way, domestic farm prices can be maintained while quantities of farm exports which the world really wants, and will take without protest, can move readily into world trade at the going world price."

WPA Workers Hold Rights; Christgau

Workers seeking private employment will not jeopardize their rights to WPA work, according to a bulletin ordered issued this week by J. B. Kovarik, seventh district director.

Area engineers, in charge of operations in the district, have been officially advised of this fact this week by S. P. Roach, assistant supervisor of the Division of Employment, who further assures every WPA worker that "the district office, will, upon termination of the private employment, use every means to make sure the worker is re-assigned to a WPA project as promptly as possible."

Quoting from a letter, signed by Victor Christgau, state administrator, Director Kovarik urged that all project workers accept private employment whenever and wherever it is offered, at not less than the prevailing wages.

"It is the policy of the administration not only to encourage but to require project workers to take private employment offered them," Mr. Kovarik stated, "and to accept the worker into his former position with WPA upon the termination of the period of private employment."

ROBERT E. LEE DEPLORED MILITARY TRAINING

When General Robert E. Lee accepted the presidency of Washington College (now Washington and Lee University) he was asked why he did not introduce military training into the college curriculum. He replied without hesitation, "because that is not the best way to train the citizenship of the country."

Final Refuge

"Is there anything in this job of tax collector—any future in it?"

"Well, when you're through they'll let you in at some home for the friendless."

OCCUPATIONAL

"Sometimes Sue speaks and sometimes she doesn't."

"Yes. She got that way since she took a position in the telephone exchange."

4-H Clubs Close Successful Week

A total of 903 4H club members accompanied by county agents, assistant county agents, and county club leaders from fourteen Northwestern Minnesota counties attended the twenty-fifth annual 4H club rally at the Northwest School of Agriculture last week. Based upon attendance, interest in the class and laboratory instruction, and the keen but friendly rivalry in the one-act play, music, athletic, and livestock and farm crops judging contests, this was considered the most successful Club Week ever held on the Aggie campus.

4H club members from East and West Ottertail, Clay, Becker, Norman, Mahnomen and East and West Polk counties were in attendance at the first three days of the week followed by delegations from Lake of the Woods, Roseau, Kittson, Marshall, Pennington, Red Lake, and Clearwater counties the latter part of the week. This made it possible to offer excellent accommodations in the dormitories, dining hall, auditorium, and class and laboratory buildings.

In the one-act play contest, the Marshall county cast under the direction of Mrs. H. Rosendahl, assisted by county club leader Evelyn Bierbaum, and County Agent R. A. Reierson, won first place on the play "Say It With Taffy". This cast will represent Northwestern Minnesota at the State Contest to be held at the State Fair. East Ottertail county, winner of first place among the Southern Valley counties, placed second in the district with "The Silver Lining" presented under the direction of Mrs. Hazel McLain, county 4H club leader. Lake of the Woods county ranked second in the northern division on "Mother Has Her Say", while Pennington county was third with "Little Black Sambo". In the southern division, West Ottertail was second with "Balanced Diet", and Clay third with "Grandpa Goes Hunting".

The Clay county triple trio ranked first in the vocal music section and will represent the district at the State Contest. Second place was awarded to the Kittson county girls' quartette. The Pennington county girls' trio third, Roseau mixed trio fourth, and Marshall girls' quintette fifth. In the Southern valley division, the Norman county male quartette ranked second, and the East Ottertail cantata third.

The Norman county orchestra won first place in the instrumental division and will represent the district at the State Fair. Second place was awarded the St. Hilaire band from Pennington county.

(Girls 15 years and under) Shirley Sands, Clay, first; Arlene Hilstrand, East Ottertail, second; Lillian Bowhall, Norman, third; Lorraine Moen, Mahnomen, fourth; Edna Wieberg, E. Polk, fifth.

Morris Maruska, Angus, West Polk, was the highest ranking individual in this contest with Willard Westby, Clay county, second, and Maurice Koester, Clay, third. General Livestock Judging Contest: The Clearwater county team composed of Kermit Long, Graydon Postier, and Edmund Rydeen, won first place; the Clay county team, second; Mahnomen, third; and Marshall, fourth. Kermit Long, Clearwater county, was the highest ranking individual in this contest, and Gerald Pingree, Clay county, second. Dairy Judging Contest: Mervin Minske, Jack Peterson, and George Gola of Mahnomen county won first place in the dairy cattle judging contest; a team composed of Wallace Erickson, Owen Weckwerth, and Leland Lian of Pennington county, second; and Kittson county, third. George Gola, Mahnomen, was the highest ranking individual in this contest, with Ithol Schipper, W. Ottertail, second; and Wallace Erickson, Pennington county, third. Athletic Events: Norman county won first place in the various athletic events with a total of 565 points; Pennington county, second; Clay county, third; Lake of the Woods, fourth; Kittson, fifth; and Mahnomen, sixth.

The champion crops judging team and the winning building material team were also awarded a trip to the State Fair to enter the State Contest. The champion livestock and dairy judging teams were awarded silver cups.

SEE CHANCE OF CHAIN GANG AT GRANITE FALLS

Granite Falls—Some day a prisoner will escape to write a book about being a fugitive from a chain gang at Granite Falls, as a result of an ordinance in that city providing that jail prisoners must work during their sentence—and possibly wear chains. The ordinance has been under consideration for some time, but finally passed the council as a result of the need for labor on odd jobs about the city. No NRA working hours for the prisoners were supplied, and a 10 hour working day maximum is listed in the ordinance Teeth in the law are seen in a section which makes it possible for the officers in charge to "use all reasonable means necessary to prevent escape or enforce obedience." Chief of Police August Anderberg interprets this to mean a "chain gang" if necessary, altho it is likely that an alternative of "bread and water in solitary confinement" will be given for those who renig on the work. Furthermore, time so spent will not be counted as a part of the sentence. For each day of labor the prisoner will be credited $1.50 on any judgment for fine or costs, and may be discharged when ever the fine has been worked out. To avoid any "ribbing" by the boys around town, a penalty for such insults has been provided of five days at the same task!

GASOLINE TIPS INTO FACE SPARK PLUG IGNITES IT

Winger—Burned about the head when gas was thrown into his face and ignited when his hand touched the spark plug of a car, Morris Olson, of Winger, in Polk county, suffered added pains when he accidently drank some lysol solution to alleviate his thirst. Olson was hauling gasoline with Pete Zahl. The truck having stalled, the gas pipe was disconnected in an attempt to get gas into the carburetor; and Olson, with a cup of gasoline in his hand, stood on the running board. As the truck started forward, his hand came into contact with one of the spark plugs, the gasoline meanwhile splashing into his face when he was thrown forward. The gasoline ignited with the electrical connection. The fire was extinguished with water from a nearby ditch, but Olson was rather severely burned and was rushed to a hospital at McIntosh. To climax the situation, he accidently drank the lysol solution while in the hospital. He is recovering from his injuries.

HAIL BIG AS BASEBALLS STRIKES CLAY COUNTY

Moorhead—Hailstones as big as baseballs fell in the area near Felton not far from Moorhead last week, reaking windows in farm buildings, injuring livestock and causing considerable damage to crops. Edwin Horn, farmer, stated that many windows in his home were broken, and Herman Horn reported every window in his home was smashed by the large ice balls. L. C. Larson, a third farmer, stated that 35 panes were broken. Estimates varied as to the amount of damage done. The storm apparently traveled a narrow strip in a southwest-northwest direction, missing the village of Felton entirely, but striking at Kragness, Ulen and Georgetown.

Singing Towers at Dallas Centennial

Dallas, June—"Howdy, Stranger."

Twenty Singing Towers will pour out the melodic equivalent of that famous western greeting to visitors of the Texas Centennial Exposition, opening at Dallas June 6, and continuing to November 29.

This welcoming voice, one of the outstanding features of the Exposition, is omnipresent on grounds. Singing Towers, or sound pylons as they are technically known, are part of the $150,000 radio and public address system built as the commercial exhibit of the Gulf Oil Corporation.

Filling a long felt need in World's Fairs, the system can be used either for entertainment or for news or emergency announcements in all parts of the grounds. So versatile is the public address network that it can be broken down into six separate systems of one or more singing towers each. Thus music or entertainment suitable to distinct sections of the grounds is possible.

Those entering the gates, for example, may be greeted with light inspirational or march music while visitors to the livestock area may be listening to a hill-billy band and those in the cultural center surrounding the lagoon may hear a salon orchestra's soft, soothing strains.

These programs, produced from the $50,000 Gulf studio building at which visual and audible appreciation of radio broadcasting will be open to visitors at all hours, will be heard throughout the grounds more than 70 per cent of each day's operating period.

SUMMER IS HERE, BUT CITY WATER MAIN FROZEN

Argyle—Just as residents of Argyle had a hunch that summer might have arrived, their hopes were disillusioned when it was found that a water line was frozen up tight—late in May! Street Commissioner Louis Carlson tested the hydrant at the city hall, and when water could not be drawn he came to the conclusion that the shut-off valve was out of order. The hydrant was taken out and found to be in good order Then a test was made of the pipe line from another hydrant and it was found that the dead-end water main on which the "dry" hydrant was set was frozen up tight. Two hours work with the electric thawer was required to get the water running through the hydrant. The freeze-up came some time after the end of March, when the hydrant was last used, and recent warm weather apparently had failed to thaw it out.

THE PUBLIC FORUM

RIDICULE AND SILENCE

Whenever any practical humanitarian plans to wipe out "depression" and "relief" is proposed, the deflationists always depend on the yellow press to curb such plan, by first ridiculing it, and when that fails then turn to "silencing".

The ridiculing of Dr. Townsend by a Congressional "Investigation" not only failed to stop the interest in the McGroarty Bill (Townsend Plan) but actually greatly increased interest in it so that in a few weeks the Townsend organization gained over a million members, and on June 1, 1936, had over ten million members.

While this organization, so far, is non-partisan, yet it does not interfere with a consistent vote so far, as the members of the Farmer-Labor Party is concerned, inasmuch as all endorsed Congressional and Legislative candidates are favorable to the plan.

Anyone bothering to read the McGroarty Bill knows at once that it is not only a pension plan, but a plan that will eliminate unemployment, and put some price value back into tangible wealth, so the bond holders will not get the bulk of the people's earnings, as they now do.

The Townsend Plan never has been claimed to be any panacea, but it is one real practical step in positively necessary legislation to bring back normal conditions. Study the plan and you will soon get rid of your prejudice, unless you believe in usury and revolution, as it is only the security holders and revolutionists that can logically oppose the plan.

MODERN REFRIGERATION

Nationally famous
ELECTROLUX

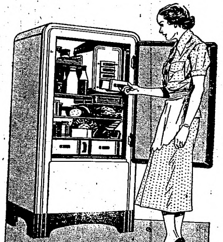
KEROSENE (coal oil)
NEEDS NO ELECTRIC CURRENT . . . NO DAILY ATTENTION . . . NO WATER



HERE'S WHAT MRS. T. N. RYAN OF DOWNSVILLE, LA., WRITES: "I wish I could see Electrolux in every home because we have tried it out and know just what it is! We saw the ad in the paper and decided we could pay for Electrolux with just what we could save by having it six months. We did!"

IF you've always longed for the many worthwhile conveniences and comforts of modern city refrigeration, here's great news! Kerosene Electrolux brings farm homes anywhere all these big advantages. In all important respects, it is identical with the gas-operated Electrolux now serving finest American homes and apartments in cities from coast to coast.

You'll like the way Electrolux saves steps and food . . . freezes delicious desserts, plenty of ice cubes. And you'll like, too, its amazingly low cost to run. This ideal farm refrigerator operates on ordinary kerosene (coal oil) for only a few pennies a day . . . actually saves enough on food bills and refrigerating cost to pay for itself. One filling of the tank lasts a week or more. Electrolux uses no water.

The reason Electrolux can operate so efficiently is its simple refrigerating method. Electrolux has no moving parts at all! A wickless glow-type kerosene burner does all the work . . . eliminates depreciation due to moving, wearing parts. Today—clip coupon below for free literature.

NOTE ALL THESE BIG ELECTROLUX ADVANTAGES:

NEWS of the WEEK

NEW PREMIER ENDS STRIKE

Paris, France—Leon Blum, France's first Socialist Premier, succeeded in effecting an agreement by which a million striking workers, threatening a nation-wide tie-up of industry, returned to work. Unions gain recognition, a 40-hour week is granted and wage increases range from 7 to 15 per cent.

N. Y.'s NO. 1 ENEMY CONVICTED

New York City—Charles 'Lucky' Luciano, dubbed by Special Prosecutor Thomas E. Dewey one of the nation's most dangerous racketeers, was convicted with eight confederates on 62 counts of compulsory prostitution. All face long prison terms, two of them for life as old offenders. Four more of the gang had already pleaded guilty and were brought back to prison to testify for the State.

BLACK LEGION THREATENS

Detroit, Mich.—Warned that his home would be bombed by the Black Legion, Mayor William W. Voisine, of Ecorse, a town of 17,000, was forced to take refuge in the Municipal Building. The bombing of his home ten months ago is now attributed to the organization of terrorists charged with wholesale murders throughout this State.

LIBERAL PLANKS DEMANDED

Cleveland, Ohio—Liberal elements within the Republican Party will make a determined fight for liberalized social and economic planks in the platform to be adopted by the National Convention now in session. Many go as far as to echo the suggestion of Ex-President Hoover that even the Constitution might be changed, "if necessary" to give the States control over wages and working conditions.

LEWIS ROUTS A. F. OF L.

Washington, D. C.—John L. Lewis, head of the United Mine Workers of America, out-generalled the American Federation of Labor in its scheme to unionize the 450,000 workers in the steel industry. Instead of the A. F. of L. policy of separate craft unions for each type of work, Lewis will attempt, through his new Committee for Industrial Organization, to organize steel men into a huge industry-wide union.

SOLVING HEADACHE MYSTERY

Atlantic City, N. J.—Because the brain itself cannot register pain, and because so many and varied causes are blamed for headaches, the delegates to the American Neurological Association's annual meeting took keen interest in Dr. Temple Fay's description of ten year's work in studying headpains. He traced 547 possible irritating conditions, all attributable to the fluid balance of the body. His suggestion: fat people should reduce the amount of liquid consumed to a quart a day; lean, neurotic types should increase liquids to three or more quarts a day.

GERMANY IMPORTS CURBED

Washington, D. C.—Sensing, in an increase of 13 per cent in imports from Germany, an attempt to "dump" the products of the Reich on American markets at ruinous prices, the Treasury Department has announced "Countervailing" duties on German cameras, glass ornaments, toys, dolls, cotton, rayon and leather goods, china, surgical instruments and many other products. American manufacturers complained of unfair trade practices on Germany's part which the increases in duty ranging from 22 1-2 to 56 per cent seek to correct.

EX-CADDY WINS GOLF HONOR

Springfield, N. J.—Although he won only $1,000 as first prize in the National Open Golf Championship, Tony Manero, ex-caddy and now a pro in Greensboro, N. C., will have a chance this year to make $50,000 from endorsements, tours, radio contracts and "ghost-written" magazine and newspaper articles. Only 31 years old, he hung up a course record of 67 and won the Championship with a card of 282.

COMMODITIES REGULATED

Washington, D. C.—With the Securities Exchange Commission in smooth operation, the Administration's Commodity Exchange Commission will now start to function. Composed of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce and the Attorney General, the Commission will seek to limit individual trading, prohibit fictitious transactions and eliminate other abuses in the purchase and sale of wheat, cotton, butter, eggs, rice, corn, oats, barley, rye flaxseed, grain sorghums, mill feed and Irish potatoes.

AN ACT WITHOUT THE STAR

Rome, Italy—While all Italy paid homage to Marshal Pietro Bodoglio, conqueror of Ethiopia, on his triumphal return from Africa, Benito Mussolini remained quietly at his summer home. The occasion also celebrated the granting of the Italian Constitution, 88 years ago. While bands blared and legions of sun-browned Italians marched in Rome, Halie Selassie, the conquered, was welcomed in London by loudly cheering mobs, both white and colored.

CREATED THE MARCEL WAVE

Paris, France—While millions of women cling to the "marcel wave" few ever heard of its creator. He was Francois Marcell Grateau, a hairdresser, and he just died at his chateau at the age of 84. He invented the process in 1872 because he liked his mother's wavy tresses. His charge for a "wave" started at the equivalent of 10 cents; when at the height of his fame a titled English woman paid him $600 for one treatment.

PRIDE OF BRITAIN'S MERCHANT MARINE ARRIVES IN NEW YORK ON MAIDEN VOYAGE

Completing the voyage from Southampton-Cherbourg in a little over four days, the "Queen Mary," latest addition to the Cunard White Star Fleet, was accorded a tumultuous welcome in New York Harbor on her first Western crossing. While her 200,000 horsepower makes her the most powerful ship in the world, she is not the largest, her 1,018 feet being 11 feet less than the length of the French Liner "Normandie," which also tops her 73,000 tons by 7,000 tons. The "Queen Mary," however, carries 4,000 passengers, nearly double the capacity of her French rival. She cost $30,000,000 and has eleven decks.

KIDDIE REVUE PRESENTED AT LOCAL THEATRE

Tap Dancing Class to be Presented In Review Friday and Saturday

Fifty five members of Miss Wenner's dancing class will present a "Kiddie Revue" on Friday and Saturday of this week at the Lyceum Theatre.

The members of the "Revue" have been selected for their particular ability in being able to best portray the various parts assigned to them.

Among the high lights of the performance will be a portrayal of the University of Minnesota cheer leaders. The cheer leaders will be Clifford Vevea, Marcella Ruane and Lorraine Bakken. A solo dance will be given by Miss Louise Ann Peterson, and Miss Arlene Michaels will sing a solo number.

The "Revue" will depict the story of the State of Minnesota, and the members of the cast will exemplify the industrial and beauty spots of the state. The main theme of the "Revue" will be an aeroplane trip over the state of Minnesota. As the plane, piloted by Miss Ira Groslie, passes over each place of interest a member of the cast will portray by a dance of such character that will best describe and picture to the audience the point of interest.

Among the places that are shown in the "Revue" are Minneapolis, St. Paul, Duluth and other large towns of the state. The milling, dairying, and mining industries are handled in such a manner that they will be easily recognized. Such beauty spots as Fort Snelling, the Indian reservations, and the Forests of Minnesota are also shown.

Miss Wenner has been engaged in operating a dancing school in this city for the past year. The "Revue" will climax the season and her pupils will be given a vacation. Miss Wenner will commence her dancing classes again in September.

New classes will be organized to accommodate all who wish to enter. The warming house which was used at the skating rink is being moved to the park and will be used for a dressing room, Mr. Chalmers stated.

Junior League to Meet R. L. Falls

Sixty boys have been enrolled in the junior baseball league being sponsored by the local legion post, coach Lee stated Wednesday. They have been divided into three groups as to size and ability. About 20 of the older boys comprising one of the groups are being groomed as the first team string and the other two groups will be grouped as a west side team and an east side team.

A game has been scheduled wherein the first string will meet the Red Lake Falls junior baseball team, which is to be played at the fairgrounds on Thursday evening, June 18th. The game is to be called at 6:30 p. m.

Twelve uniforms have been secured, Mr. Lee stated. The following business firms have donated towards the suits: Lund and Tunberg, Al's Coffee Shop, J. & B. Drugs, Northern Chevrolet, Wiener Top and Body Works, Louis De Cremer, Soo Cafe, Hartz, Thronson Motor, O'Hara Fuel and Ice, Cities Service, Railway Express. A half dozen baseballs were donated by Montgomery Ward and Company.

SCHOOL BOARD TO CONSIDER REPAIR ITEMS THIS YEAR

Federal Funds for Nursing Service May Be Made Available

Various repairs and improvements necessary in the public school buildings and equipment of the city were discussed and referred to the maintenance committee for inspection, at a meeting of the school board held Monday evening. Installation of hot water in the Northrop building was proposed. This would necessitate the installing of a new tank and hot water piping from the boiler room to the wash rooms. Replacement of the hotwater tank in the boiler room of the Lincoln building with a 350 gallon capacity tank was also proposed.

The changing over of the motors in the Lincoln building from D. C. to A. C. was brought up at the meeting. This would require five new motors in the industrial training department, and the replacement of the ten h. p. ventilating motor which could be accomplished for approximately six hundred dollars, including equipment, labor and materials. With the purchase of additional type-writers, which has already been approved by the board, it was found necessary to secure additional typewriter tables and chairs for the typewriting room. About 26 tables and thirty chairs will be required.

The board of education decided to make application for federal funds for nursing service for the coming school year. There is a possibility that two hundred dollars may be allotted to the city to supplement local funds, reports from government authorities indicate. In order to qualify for the federal funds, a proper resolution must be adopted by the board, a health service budget set up, and an advisory committee named.

A call for bids on the coal supply for next year will be issued by the board, bids to be submitted at the July meeting of the board. Coal requirements will be approximately 225 tons of screenings and 250 tons of lump coal.

A report presented to the board showed that fuel costs for the past year were the highest they have been since the year of 1922-23, with every building showing a higher fuel consumption. Total fuel costs this year were $5010.01, as compared with $4,187.81 for last year.

The attendance during the past term was amazingly good, with a percentage of ninety-five as compared to 93.8 per cent for last year. The attendance record is attributed to the few cases of illness suffered by students during the past year, as revealed by the health report.

Workmen's Committee To Meet Monday Eve.

The Workmen's Protective Association decided at its meeting on Monday evening to rent the old Legion hall under the Union State bank on a monthly basis and to hold meetings every Monday evening in the future. Regular business meeting will be held on the second and fourth Mondays of the month and will be closed meetings for members only. The first and third Monday of the month will be devoted to open forums where matters of general interest will be discussed and everyone is invited, Earl Long business agent, stated Wednesday.

The central committee is to meet on Monday evening June 15 at the hall and every member of the committee is urged to attend, Mr. Long stated.

Boy Scouts Camp At Lake Tullaby

90 boys from Thief River Falls, Crookston, Warren, Stephen, and Greenbush are enjoying a Boy Scout outing on the beautiful shores of Lake Tullaby at Mahnomen, Minnesota.

The camp is a regular feature of the Boy Scout work. Together with the regular Boy Scout work, they are taught the principles of woodcraft and outdoor life in the native settings.

The director of the camp is Emery Johnson of Warren. The adult leaders are Bert Kirconnell, St. Hilaire, E. R. Clark, Crookston and Mr. Iverson, Grand Forks, North Dakota. Mr. Kirconnell, Mr Clark and Mr. Iverson are the teachers of archery, camp cooking and handicraft respectively.

Permanent office headquarters are located at the camp, and other facilities are available to make the outing complete. The boys have at their disposal a launch which will accommodate 200 boys.

The group was rather depressed in spirits Sunday and Monday because of the heavy rains. Their enthusiasm for the work they had to do mounted however, when the weather cleared, and they are now having a fine time. The officers say that they have never seen a group of boys so eager to make progress.

G. H. Mayer-Oakes, Clarence Sande, and Ole Lee from this city went to the camp the first part of the week.

Makes Appeal to First-Time Voters

An appeal to the young voters of Minnesota who are casting their first ballots this year was issued last week by John T. Lyons, State Campaign Director of the Farmer-Labor Association, as he urged all voters to go to the polls in the June 15 primary.

"The first voters this year will bring a new and different point of view to the political scene," said Mr. Lyons, "There are 100,000 of them in Minnesota, young men and women who are 21 and 22 years old, eligible to vote for the first time in a state campaign. They should make it a point to acquaint themselves thoroughly with the programs of all three parties by a careful reading of the platform of each.

"They are the generation that was fourteen and fifteen years old in 1929. Their entire youth has been spent in the depression.

"Some come from farm families where the problems of low prices and debts have weighed heavily. Some from relief homes; some from homes where at least the father or mother had a job, but the problems of low wages, cost of living and security were ever present. A few come from homes which were well-off.

"But for all of them youth has included the problem of facing an uncertain future, of finding a niche in a world which has no place open for them.

"They will not be voting by tradition, but by what they have seen and felt. This bloc of voters is an outstanding question-mark of the campaign of 1936."

Reduce Traffic Toll, Safety Committee Asks

The Minnesota Public Safety committee asked motorists to assist in reducing the accident toll by refraining from stopping at the scene of mishaps.

The request is prompted by numerous reports of secondary accidents resulting when curious motorists create additional hazards by blocking the highways in the vicinity of mishaps.

"Motorists approaching a scene of an accident should drive slowly, but should not stop when it is obvious that the injured are being aided sufficiently," C. H Zealand director of the committee, said.

Reports of further mishaps caused by jammed highways following an accident are coming with increasing frequency, from members of the state highway patrol and police and sheriffs, he said.

At the same time, Mr. Zealand, announced that offers of free booth space for safety exhibits had been received from officials of many fairs throughout the state.

The Minnesota Public Safety committee will provide a portion of the exhibit for the fairs, he said.

POPULAR OPERA CLOSES

New York City—The experiment of giving a Spring Season of opera at the Metropolitan Opera House at $3.00 "top" (about half the regular Winter Season price) came to grief at the end of its fourth experimental week. Music lovers found that they had been hearing many of the same singers at $1.00 in other opera companies, and lack of patronage darkened the big house.

RIFT IN LABOR RANKS

Washington, D. C.—The flat refusal of the Committee for Industrial Organization, under the leadership of John L. Lewis, of the United Mine Wirkers, to disband, as demanded by President William Green of the American Federation of Labor, threatens the existence of the latter organization. Of its 3,024,000 members, 1,144,000 support the UMW and CIO policies of organization by large industries. Green's AFL wants smaller units of craft workers organized according to types of labor.

RAIL RATES REDUCED

New York City—This week marks a general reduction of rates on all Eastern railroads from 3.6 cents per mile to 2 cents, with a 3-cent rate on Pullman cars. Characteristic reductions for coach travel from this city: Chicago, from $32.70 to $18.20; Detroit, from $24.82 to $14.70; Washington, from $8 14 to $4.55. Bus lines promptly met the challenge by adopting new schedules ranging from 1.5 to 1.75 cents per mile.

COPYRIGHT, CHANNING POLLOCK WNU SERVICE

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—The Duke, a pleasant, likable youth of twenty-three, jobless and broke, enters an unoccupied summer home in Southampton, seeking shelter from a terrific rain storm. He makes himself at home. Six years ago his father had died in China, leaving the lad, Barry Gilbert, to fight his way back to the States. He did not recollect ever having had a mother. Dozing at the fireside, he is startled by the arrival of a butler, Willetts; a chauffeur, Evans; a cook and a maid. He learns that the son of the owner of the house, Jack Ridder, whom the servants had never seen, is expected. He decides to bluff it out. His supposed parents have left for Germany. Next morning he is given a letter for his "mother." He opens it and finds a message from the real Jack, saying he could not come, and returning a hundred-dollar bill. The boy's father had pensioned him into obscurity. Barry pockets the money, intending to return it later. He orders Evans to take him to Montauk, intending to disappear there. On the way he assists Judge Hambidge and his daughter, Patricia, whose car had broken down. Believing he is Jack Ridder, she invites him to dinner the following Thursday.

CHAPTER II.—Barry returns to Southampton, deciding to stay a bit longer. Mr. Ridder, Sr., through his newspaper, the Globe, accuses Judge Hambidge of taking orders from Tammany Hall in a condemnation proceeding. Barry meets Peter Winslow, prominent attorney. Winslow tells Barry that Judge Hambidge had seen an accident in which a woman was killed by a taxicab. At home Barry finds the wife of the real Jack Ridder awaiting him. Her husband is in jail in New York, charged with the murder of Mike Kelly, Tammany boss.

"Under arrest?" Barry echoed. "What are you talking about?"

For answer, the girl reached across to the library table, and handed him the newspaper she had been reading when he came into the room.

"That's what John Clarke Ridder did—last night," she said. "Killed a guy. That damned skunk, Mike Kelly. Boss Kelly of Tammany Hall"

CHAPTER III

AFTER all, she wasn't such a "glittery" lady.

For, as Barry glanced at the newspaper headlines unfolded before him, she crumpled suddenly, and dropped into the big chair.

"Steady!" the Duke admonished her. The Duke went back to those headlines. "Boss Kelly Murdered," they read. "Body Found by Servants. Skull Crushed. Midnight Caller Hunted by Police."

"Was your husband the midnight caller?" he asked.

The girl nodded wearily.

"And he's John Clarke Ridder, Jr.?"

She nodded again.

For some reason he never quite understood, the Duke had stopped wondering whether Willetts was listening outside. Instead he was thinking of a letter that lay in the drawer of the library table; a letter from a heart-hungry woman, who had written to this boy, from three thousand miles away. "I am counting the days to your letter. You can never know how much I've wanted it, and how long, and how I pray that nothing may happen now."

Well, something had happened. Something that would end that old woman's efforts to make it up with the boy's father; something that might well be the end of them both.

"Why did your husband kill Boss Kelly?"

"He didn't."

"You said—"

"I said, 'That's what John Clarke Ridder did.' Well, that's what they say he did, and it isn't going to make much difference whether he did it or not."

"But you don't think he did it."

"I know he didn't. He had reason enough, and he's done a lot of crazy things, but Jack wouldn't hurt a fly."

"Why did you come out here?"

"For help."

"Well," the Duke said, "maybe I can help you. God knows I'd like to. Anyway, let's see where we stand."

He crossed the room, and crossed the room, and sat opposite her, on a little library chair.

"Go on," he urged. "What's your name?"

"What's yours? Your real name?"

"Barry Gilbert. I'm a bum. I took shelter in this house, one rainy night a couple of weeks ago, and everybody thought I was young Ridder, so I left 'em think so. That's my story. What's yours?"

She actually smiled.

"You've got your nerve," she observed. "Well, that's what we need now. My name's Peggy O'Day."

"Actorine?"

"Sort of. I was a chorus girl in 'Blossom Time' when I met Jack in Florida. He was a bum, too. Living under a fake name. We still live under that. Jay Rogers. Everybody calls him 'Jack.' The old man paid him fifty dollars a week for not using his name. We've got a little boy, now, and he doesn't even know his name's Ridder. He thinks he's Jay Rogers, Jr. The old man doesn't know what name he took, and he doesn't care."

Everything about the girl was a contradiction, the Duke thought. Hard, and yet soft, with her steely eyes, and her quivering lips. A chorus girl who believed in her husband, and came an hundred miles through the night to help him. A philosopher, the Duke, as we have seen, and he found himself musing, "Is anyone black or white? Aren't we all contradictions—kind of a dirty gray?"

"Go on," he said.

"Well, Jack was getting his fifty from the old man's lawyer—when I met him. We were playing West Palm Beach, and he followed me to Miami. Hadn't anything else to do. He was drinking all the time, and I knew he'd never quit until he had to. 'I'll marry you,' I told him, 'but not while you're loafing around on money you get from a guy that's ashamed of you. I want a home,' I said, 'and a husband I can respect. You get a job, and I'll marry you.'"

"Did he?"

"Yes, he did, and I married him. That week. It was a good job, too—night clerk in a big hotel at Palm Beach. After that, we let the fifty lay in the post office. Jack didn't want to, at first, but I said, 'We're going to make Jay Rogers mean something, and then we're going back and talk turkey to the old man.' We had a swell little home, and the kid came, and he's swell, too. And then, all at once, the boom busted right in our face, and the hotel closed, and we beat it back to New York. Say, what am I telling you this for?"

"Go on."

"Well, the next chapter's the same old story. No money. No job. Tramping the street, looking for work. Know what that's like?"

"I invented it," said the Duke.

"Well, then, you know. Things kept happening. The boy got sick, and the people we rented the room from threatened to put us out, and I guess Jack couldn't stand it. So he went to see his mother—without telling me. He didn't tell her about me, either.

"The old lady gave him a hundred bucks, and invited him down here. I don't know what else happened, because I was so mad he didn't dare tell me. Proud? Well, partly, but I guess the truth is I was scared they'd separate us. Anyway, I made him send the money back. 'What're we going to do?' he said. 'Let the kid starve? I can't get work.' 'No,' I answered, 'but maybe I can.'

"Well, there wasn't an Aborn show in town. Or any other regular show that wanted me. So last Monday I landed in a joint, called The Cocoanut Bar. One of those places where you get a ten-course dinner and a revue for two dollars, and both of 'em rotten. Salad without dressing, and you don't care because the show girls are the same way. Tough spot—The Cocoanut Bar—but I wasn't choosey last Monday."

"So, then, Jack was mad."

"Plenty. He'd been promised a place as elevator man in Brooklyn, but we couldn't wait for that. You can be as straight in a cabaret as you can in a convent, if you want to be. Oh, well—last night, Mike Kelly came in. About eight o'clock. With two strong-arm guys. I knew him right away, because he was five weeks at the hotel where Jack worked in Palm Beach. And he sat down, and sent for the boss—Luis Morano, the boss is—and they had a stiff pow-wow. Morano was sore all through when he came back where the dressing rooms are. And then we swung into a number, called 'Tickle Me.' The girls go up to the men, in that number, and paw 'em a good deal. And, in the middle of this pawing, Kelly jumps up, and yells that I've tried to pick his pocket. I'd really just got to him, as another girl left, but he grabbed my arm, and shouted so you could have heard him in Harlem. Luis ran over, and the bouncer brought a cop, and a crowd gathered.

"Kelly'd been drinking a lot. 'You can't get away with that!' he kept yelling at Morano. 'I'll send this girl to the Island, and you to the hot-spot! You watch me!'

"'I got nothing to do with it,' Luis answered. 'I don't even know this girl. She only came Monday. Isn't that right, boys?'

"Well, the end of it was that I walked out with the cop. I'd've been in the lock-up yet, only there was a decent young fellow on the desk at the station house. He let me go on my promise to return if I was wanted, there being no one there to sign the complaint."

While she talked, the Duke was thinking.

Astonishing things had happened, and went on happening. Were astonishing things always happening, everywhere? And did they come about as quietly as this; as much as though they were the commonplaces of daily routine?

"You've walked into a pretty mess," the girl had said. But, after all it wasn't his mess. So far as he was concerned, the game was up.

He had made full and complete confession to this girl, without a moment's hesitation. Firstly, because the game was up, anyway, and, secondly, because it had seemed the right moment for laying cards on the table. He had asked to see her hand, and he couldn't expect to do that without showing his own. Without inspiring her confidence.

Why did he want to inspire her confidence? What was her story to him? Why should he care what happened to a woman he had never seen—in Bad Nauheim? But, damn it, he had seen her! He had seen into her mind and heart, which is a good deal more than looking at a face, or a black satin dress. Her life would be over with this. And the old man's. "The doctor says any shock might prove serious. One false step on your part, if he knew, would end everything forever. And he would know. Ill as he is, he still has his newspaper sent him, and he still reads every word."

The Duke felt sorry for these young people, too,—for that foolish young husband who "wouldn't hurt a fly," and for this painted, hard-soft young wife and mother, who had wanted a home and a man she could respect.

Patricia? Well, that hurt. He had known it would. He had known, from that first day, that he cared a lot for this girl who needed a spanking, but he had known, too, that his caring wasn't going to come to anything. Even if his luck had held, you couldn't marry a girl like that, and then have her find out that you were "a bum." An imposter. It didn't matter now. What mattered now was whether this boy had killed Mike Kelly. And, if he hadn't, whether it was "going to make much difference" — with all the Boss' cohorts arrayed against him. And, anyway, how the whole business was to be kept — for a while, at least—from the woman who was "counting the days" to his letter at Nauheim.

"You've got your nerve," Peggy O'Day had said. "Well, that's what we need now." And, as he listened, Barry was more and more compelled to agree with her.

* * * * * * *

"We got home around half past ten o'clock," the girl had been saying, "and Jack was wild when he saw the cop, and heard the story. 'I'll be back for you tomorrow,' the cop said, 'and you'd better be here. This department takes its orders from Mike Kelly, and don't you forget that.'

"'I'm going to see Mike Kelly,' Jack says. 'I knew him pretty well in Palm Beach. And I know where he lives. I'll be back here by midnight.'

"He was—just as the clock was striking. I remember that, because I thought of a line from a burlesque of an old play I was in once. 'The hour has struck, and I am here.' Jack was all-a-tremble. 'The son of a sea-cook!' he says. 'The skunk! I'll get that guy some day!'

"'Wouldn't he see you?' I asked.

"'Sure, he saw me,' Jack said. 'The butler brought me right in—a Jap, or a Filipino, or something. Kelly'd been drinking, and he was drinking more—in the dining room. He came in to me, in the drawing room, though, and shut the doors behind him. The Jap—or the Filipino, came in after, with a bottle of Scotch whiskey, and two glasses, and Mike kept on drinking. I had one with him. He was pleasant enough to start with. The telephone rang in the hall, and he apologized for going out to answer it. When he came back, "You'll have to make it snappy," he says. "I've got an important conference here in a few minutes."'

"'So then I told him about you, and he went nutty.

"'"She's a damned little thief!" he yelled.

"'"She's my wife," I answered.'

Sports Snorts

La Moody, than whom there is no lovlier raqueteer, smiled softly. The smile, albeit beautiful, and the heavenly Helen were almost antonymous. Mrs. Poker Face, the appellation of some vitriolic verbster, was a peculiarly apt pen portrait. She so rarely indulged in these genial grimaces that the attendant excrescense of the Fourth Estate, (sports writers), wondered what choice morsel of gossip she who had been Helen Wills would disseminate this time.

After some preliminary posh, she murmured that she had an overpowering yen to participate in the Wightman Cup matches, BUT —. The scribes were scarcely surprised This maybe yes maybe no attitude had, through the years, become identified with the Wills. We have a sneaking suspicion that the reason for Helen's present hesitancy is physical condition. To be trite, and quite insulting, La Moody is not getting any younger. It is an arduous grind at best, with possible defeat at the end of the trail. She has had more than her share of glory. So-o maybe Helen no go to England. If she does enter the tourney, we feel that the prime motive will be to get another crack at the British gals, some of whom forgot that she was the best in the world in last year's various tournaments and smacked the stuffing out of her. I mean her game.

SPORTS SPOUTS: Harry Stuhldreher, one of the famous Four Horsemen of Notre Dame, snares the Wisconsin coaching job left vacant by Doc Spears. This headache is no sinecure. The Badgers face, among others, Minnesota and Ohio State. This fight-marish schedule might feaze some other grid mentor; but Harry, who manufactured miracles with comparatively small Villanova, will furnish better results than the usually inadequate Badger squads warrant....Johnny Van Ryn, undoubtedly one of the best tennis doubles players in the world, has been dropped from the Davis Cup squad by the omniscent and omnipotent USLTA. Another inexplicable and high handed action by the moronic moguls who constitute one of my pet peeves....Our beauteous brassie bashers aren't doing so well in Merrie England. Patty Berg, Glenna Vare and Maureen Orcutt have already been eliminated from the women's championships. At this time, Marion Miley is the sole American survivor—and it is only the quarter final round. Ah, well, anyhow, the ocean voyage was lovely....

Next Wednesday poor Primo Carnera swaps jabs with Leroy Haynes in Ebbets Field The last time out De Preem was kayoed in three heats by this same Haynes. The ponderous but pathetic Pisan will in all probability be chopped down again. We blame the inept Boxing Commission for sanctioning this mismatch, and Carnera's money mad managers for engineering this travesty of a return setto....Young Jack Trammel, the new dreadnought destroyer, is finding it difficult to secure opponents. All other promising heavyweights are warily chary of meeting this murderous mace who scuttled Eddie Macer in one stanza....The musclers—in have commenced operations. A law firm is suing Max Schmeling for 17,500 smackers, "for services rendered." ....The czaristic fistic solons in the Empire State are funnier than ever. They have just "proclaimed" Mike Belloise featherweight champ. Petey Sarron licked Freddie Miller, the champ, last week. But, according to the Boxing Commission, this simply doesn't count.

DIAMOND DIDOES: If we seem to harp overmuch on the redoubtable Lefty Grove, heed well the following. He has won seven, lost one. Pitched seven complete games. Four shutouts. Saved one game as a relief pitcher, retiring the five men he faced. Has shutout the three contenders, Detroit, New York and Cleveland. And has an earned run average of less than one run per nine inning game We think this record merits as much comment as one can give it. Di Maggio, Gehrig, and Dickey third fourth and fifth in the Yankee lineup, are all bettering .370. Dickey leads both leagues in runs batted in. Gehrig leads both in batted in. Gehrig leads both leagues in scoring, and has six homers. Di Maggio is second in the league in battling. Is it any wonder that the Yankee lead the circuit?.... Freddie Lindstrom quits baseball. The hapless Dodgers now seem more hopeless than ever. Freddie, with a life-time batting average of .310, was a really great player in his prime. Even now, he is better than a good many outer gardeners masquerading as major leaguers. Freddie quit because of a fine business opportunity. This does not soften the blow for Brooklyn. It is a lamentable loss indeed....

THE "QUEEN" ARRIVES

New York City—The "Queen Mary" of the Cunard-White Star Line, most powerful steamship afloat, completed her maiden voyage Westward in 4 days, 12 hours, 16 minutes, about an hour more than the record of the French Liner "Normandie", holder of the trans-Atlantic blue ribbon. Officials indicate that when broken in she will capture the ocean speed record from her French rival.

WOLF REGAINS DEMO CONTROL IN MINNESOTA

Haugen Wins Over Ole Sageng for Congress In the Ninth Dist.

OLSON AND BENSON WIN WITH BIG LEADS

Brandon Takes Congress Nomination In Ninth Over Timm

(By R. M. Aalbu)

The primary election proved poor picking for the mugwumps in all parties, the regulars romping away with the nominations both in the farmer-labor and republican parties. In the democratic party primary the Wolf faction which was booted out two years ago won over the Moonan-Regan faction and now has the inside track when it comes to the question of seating of delegates at the national democratic convention which convenes on June 23.

> Senator Elmer A. Benson, nominated for the governorship in the Farmer-Labor primary, issued a statement Tuesday in which he said: "The primary results are deeply gratifying and I sincerely thank the voters of Minnesota. Naturally I am extremely happy over the nomination accorded me at a time when work in Washington prevented my returning home to conduct a campaign. I am even more pleased with the decisive expression of confidence given by those voters to the indorsed candidates on the Farmer-Labor ticket.

The farmer-labor party cast about its usual amount of votes thruout the state, while the republicans cast the largest vote since 1930. The democratic vote slumped in spite of the Wolf-Moonan feud. This is pointed out to indicate that Moonan won two years ago with republican support entering the democratic primary.

Far in the lead in the farmer-labor count is Floyd B. Olson for U. S. Senator and Elmer A. Benson for governor is leading Magnus Johnson three to one. All other endorsed candidates are far in the lead of their opponents also. The Farm Bureau Stages Membership Drive

The Pennington County Farm Bureau is again putting on a Farm Bureau drive this year Following a luncheon and training school in the Commercial Rooms on June 9th, at which time Mr. Mereness, in charge of organization for the State Farm Bureau was present. Farm Bureau committee-men are busy signing up members in this county.

It looks at the present time as though the membership will exceed two hundred. However, there are parts of the county that have not been canvassed very well and the present Farm Bureau members can help their organization in the county considerably if they will contact their neighbors who they know have not been approached to join the Farm Bureau and help increase the membership in this county.

Plans are being made at the present time for the Annual Farm Bureau picnic.

KIDDIES PRESENT MINNESOTA REVUE FRIDAY-SATURDAY

Fifty-five Members of Dancing Class Portray Points Of Interest

Under the capable direction of Miss Wenner, 55 members of the local dancing class staged a successful "Kiddie Revue" last week at the Lyceum theatre.

The theme of the "Revue" was an aeroplane trip over the state of Minnesota. As the plane passed over each place of interest members of the "Revue" portrayed that particular point of interest in such a manner that it could be easily recognized by the audience.

Miss Ira Groslie, in the role of the areoplane pilot, acted as master of ceremonies, and under her efficient guidance the members of the "Revue" presented their acts with the smoothness of a veteran troupe.

As the opening number of the "Revue" Miss Ira Groslie gave a song and tap version of "Flying High" She was followed by a dairy-maid number which portrayed the dairying industries of the state.

Miss Arlene Michaels, supported by a group of dancers in the role of sailors of the great lakes, sang the song "We Saw the Sea."

"Indian Dawn", a number representing the Indian life in the state was given by Barbara Fast, Arlene Robinson, Lois Lund, Glenis Ann Holzkneckt, and Jewell Warner.

The University of Minnesota was represented by Miss Ira Groslie, who sang "Three Cheers for Love", she was accompanied by Loraine Bakken, Clifford Vevea, and Marcella Ruane as cheerleaders.

The military finale, an interpretation of Fort Snelling, was introduced by Miss Arlene Michaels with "Little Colonel". She was supported by a group of soldiers who gave their version of the soldiers of the Fort Snelling.

The "Revue" was very well presented and showed that the members had contributed a large amount of work in the perfection of their acts.

U Specialist Instructs In Home Management

Thief River Falls was selected as the convention city for the 1937 convention of the American Legion of the Ninth District. This was decided at the convention that was held at Fergus Falls, June 14th and 15th. O. C. aPulson, prominent legionnaire of this city, was elected district commander.

Bonus Bonds May Be Secured Sunday

Ex-servicemen who are out of the city on week days may get their bonus bonds at the post office between the hours of 9 a. m. and 1 p. m., Sunday, June 21, assistant postmaster Walter Smith, stated this week.

It is necessary that all bonds be signed for by the recipient in person, Mr. Smith stated, and therefore the department has arranged to keep one window open during the above stated hours on Sunday in order to accomodate those who may be employed out of the city during the week.

The department has handled about 187 bonds to date. The average sum contained in each bond is about $500.00. This would bring the estimated total sum of the bonds received at the postoffice to $93,500.00. About 33 bonds have been certified and sent to St. Paul for payment, Mr. Smith stated.

It is hard to determine how many bonds will be handled from this postoffice as many men entitled to the bonus have had them addressed to the city from other places, Mr. Anderson stated.

New Rural Route To Start July 1st

The postoffice department will establish a new rural route out of this city July 1, 1936. The new route will be known as route number five, and will cover the district southwest of the city. It will combine the route that is now handled from St Hilaire and part of the Wylie route. In all the distance covered by this new arrangement will be about 52 miles.

Henry E. Schneider of Wylie will move to this city and will work out of this postoffice with the establishment of the new route. He will take over route number three which is at the present time carried by Perry W. Mathewson. Mr. Mathewson will take over the new route.

Patrons living on the new route who desire to receive their mail out of the Thief River Falls postoffice should notify their newspapers and correspondents.

Junior Program to be Featured at Evening Session

Over one hundred delegates and hundreds of farmers union members from all parts of the state are expected in the city on Monday, June 22, when the Minnesota Farmers Union will hold a special state convention to decide on the matter of changing the name of the organization or fighting out in the courts against an injunction issued to restrain them from using it. The injunction which was brought by the Farmers Co-operative and Educational Union of America is the culmination of a fight which started several years ago in the last named organization in this state over the co-operative activities which the farmers union conduct at South St. Paul and other points.

The members of the organization which is to hold its meeting here walked out of the original union when action which would emperil the activities of the co-operatives was taken by, what they claim was rail-roading tactics. They then formed the Minnesota Farmers Union and have collaborated with the national union's North Dakota, Wisconsin and Montana divisions in the conduct of the co-operatives since.

Leaders in the activities are to be here and speak to the conven-

LEAGUE LEADING LOCALS LAMBAST RED LAKE, 6 TO 5

Warren Takes Thief River Falls 14 to 6 in Evening Game Tuesday

The fair crowd of spectators present at the fair grounds diamond last Sunday afternoon saw a thriller of a ball game, one in which Thief River Falls vanquished an old foe for the second time in the regular league season of 1936. Red Lake Falls lost a hard battle by the close score of 6 to 5, and it took the Thief River boys eleven long innings to turn the trick.

Kiefenheim of Red Lake and Robinson of Thief River hooked up in a splendid pitchers' battle, with Robinson having a little the best of the argument. The score was tied several times during the contest and Red Lake Falls managed to tie everything in a knot in the ninth. However, a bobble followed with a double play in sight in the eleventh, and Red Lake Falls had lost another to the fast traveling local team.

Through this victory the Thief River Falls team holds possession of first place, a place the team has held since the season opened some weeks ago—and word is going around among the many members of the club that first place is going to remain in their possession until the season ends, some time ahead

The box score of the contest last Sunday, minus the summary, is as follows:

Gold Found at Roseau, Excitement and All, But Not Enough to Mine Profitably

All the feverish excitement of a Klondike gold rush was witnessed last week at Roseau, Minnesota by the discovery of gold on the site of the city hall. The only difference was that nobody could file a claim as the city had inadvertently created a monopoly on the supply by building their municipal building directly on the site of the largest vein yet to be found, according to the Northern Minnesota Leader.

The news of the gold strike was broke to the world by its discoverer, Mayor Wm. Moser. It was while the Mayor was watching a group of workers on the municipal project that the discovery was made. The glittering of the sand as it was thrown for the excavation caused the Mayor to wonder as to its true contents. His suspicions thoroughly aroused, he called Merle Beulow, foreman on the project, to the scene of the strike and they made a more minute study of the mother lore.

Thoroughly convinced that the vein contained gold or some such substance that would make it worth their while to have a test made; they procured a sample. The Mayor and Merle Beulow, bearing the sample, made a rush call on the local chemist A. H. Fikkan to have a test made. Mr. Fikkan applied all the tests that he was able to make. First he tried panning a sample of it, the gold settled to the bottom as all gold will. Not satisfied with this he applied the acid test but that also had no effect on the substance. The only answer that he could arrive at was that the substance was gold.

Not satisfied with Mr. Fikkan's opinion, the Mayor and Merle Beulow took a sample to Ruben Halverson, teacher of chemistry at the Roseau high school. Mr. Halverson made the same tests that had already been made and with the same result. His verdict was the same. Gold!

Although Mr. Halverson's opinion was that it was gold; he dampened the enthusiasm of the discoverers by maintaing that there was not enough gold in the vein to make the commercial mining of it a profitable venture. Now nobody has ever heard of a gold mine without profits so the idea of a big gold mine at Roseau was abandoned.

The next best thing to be done was to allow the general public to pan for gold so that they could see what real gold looked like in the raw. Now the citizens of Roseau are panning for gold and for the right to tell their posterity that "I panned gold in them thar sands!"

DAY AND MELBY TAKE BIG LEAD IN DIST. RACE

Poll Over 600 Votes Each Over Their Nearest Opponent

SMALL VOTE TURNS OUT IN DISTRICT

Co. Commissioner Race In First District Has Close Contests

W. E. Day and J. O. Melby, farmer-labor endorsed candidates for representatives in the legislature romped away from their opponents in the primary election on Monday piling of leads of 603 and 667 votes respectively over their nearest rival, Marius Waldal. The four leaders are J. O. Melby, 2521; W. E. Day, 2457; Marius Waldal, 1854, and Jones, 1349. These figures are without the town of Goodridge Pennington county where the resume of votes were sealed up and will not be known until the canvassing board meets and one small precinct in Red Lake county and two small precincts in Clearwater. The returns from these precincts are expected to increase the leads of Melby and Day somewhat. Ed. Baumann, communist entry received only 477 votes which is about one third of his vote of two years ago when he received 1302 votes in the district. The primary vote was considerably smaller than two years ago, however. At that time five candidates polled a combined vote of 16,123 while this year the combined vote for six candidates was only 9,774.

County commissioner races in the first district developed close competition and some surprises with A. B. Mandt coming in top place with 180 votes and Frank Race, former commissioner, his opponent in the fall with 160 votes. Chris Norbeck of North township was leading Race by a few votes until the Star township vote, the last to come in late Tuesday evening placed Race in second place with 33 votes from this precinct, Norbeck receiving only one vote. The closeness of the race can be realized when it is considered that J. V. Hoffman, who was fifth, had 143 votes, only 37 votes less than the top man.

Paul Roy, incumbent in the 3rd district romped away with first place with a vote of 275 while his nearest competitor and fall opponent Ole Skaar of Norden township received 114 votes. John Scholin gave Mr. Skaar a hard run for second place, polling 110 votes

Grand Forks Juniors Trim Locals 8 to 0

The first string juniors were defeated by a fast Grand Forks team to the tune of 8 to 0 in an exciting baseball game.

Parish of Grand Forks is outstanding as a junior pitcher, coach Geo. Lee states. However, Hellquist of the locals pitches a fine game and prospects for a good team are exceptionally bright.

Red Lake Falls Juniors will meet the locals here on Thursday evening in a twilight game to start at 6:15.

Gypsies Pay Up and Get Out on Saturday

The hypnotic and lightfingered Gypsy girls who "gypped" a local farmer out of $930 last week were released on Saturday following a great deal of stewing by the king of the tribe and the council of Wise Men who camped in the city for three days trying to break down the "sales resistance" of the local police department with hard-luck stories so as to get the womenfolks out cheaper. However, the arms of the law were adamant. and the gypping ones on Saturday finally decided to refund all of the $930. Municipal judge Lincoln Arnold fined them $40 and costs of $54 and the dusky beauties were released to hie themselves to their waiting swains.

Women Workers Are 'Free' for Low Pay

New York (FNS)—Free to work long hours at starvation wages!

That is the condition of young women and girls in the laundry industry and others where sweatshop wages are the prevailing rate of pay, in the opinion of liberal and labor leaders as they studied the wreckage left by the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court in the New York Minimum Wage Law.

From New York came reports less than two days after the nine gentlemen's decision, of hours lengthened from 40 to 48 a week, with pay being slashed from the old minimum standard of $12.40 down to $10 and even less a week. With competition as stiff as it is in the laundry industry, an increasing number of young workers face the possibility of even more drastic exploitation than they have known in the past.

Legislation comparable to the New York statute was on the books of 16 states throughout the country, but in all these too it appears likely that the minimum wage is a thing of the past.

Miss Rose Schneiderman of the Women's Trade Union League of New York, who has gained a reputation throughout the years as a fighter for the rights of young women workers, frankly admits that she doesn't know which way to turn. Stronger unions to force the employers to grant decent wages, coupled with an amendment to the constitution allowing Congress to pass social legislation is her only answer to the problem.

But building unions and passing constitutional amendments takes lots of time—and meanwhile sweat shop bosses are beginning to sweat almost the very blood out of their always exploited hired help.

The platform of the anti-fascists demands the independence of student organizations and the re-establishment of academic liberties. They are reported to have a good chance of winning

FHA Loans $19,828.24 In Pennington County

Residents of Pennington County have received 33 individual loans totaling $19,828.24, insured by the Federal Housing Administration, according to Anna Dickie Olesen, State Director of the National Emergency Council. These figures include modernization notes insured under Title I of the National Housing Act and mortgages accepted for insurance under Title II.

For the entire State of Minnesota, the total amount of money insured by the Federal Housing Administration for modernization purposes through April 30, 1936 was $5,457,343.12 involving 14,337 individual loans. Tht total covering mortgages accepted for insurance through March 31, 1936 was $2,625,684 involving 797 individual loans.

The funds advanced were made available entirely through private banking and lending institutions. the release of such a large volume of credit has directly stimulated modernization, repair and construction activity, thereby giving employment to thousands of workers in Minnesota. In addition through the instrumentality of the Federal Housing Administration, substantial progress has been made in building a sounder and more economic structure of mortgage loans, thus enabling an increasing number of individuals to own homes of their own.

A HOT bath with an ice-pack applied to the head is the best treatment when children have convulsions, while waiting for the doctor to come. Be careful the water is not too hot; children are often scalded during the excitement that prevails on such occasions.

Mayors Favor Federal Works

Constructive suggestions of 197 mayors and 98 county commissioners on the operation of the WPA program in Minnesota have been received by Victor Christgau, state WPA administrator, as a result of a questionnaire similar to that presented recently to the United States Conference of Mayors held at Washington.

From early returns, replies to the three questions contained in the questionnaire brought the following expressions of opinion:

1. "Is work the proper method of meeting the unemployment problem as compared to the dole and idleness?"

	Com.	Mayors
Favorable	78.	158
Favorable, with reservations	10	34
Unfavorable	1	5

2. "Are we doing useful and needed work under the WPA program?"

	Coms.	Mayors
Favorable	55	149
Favorable, with reservations	22	47
Unfavorable	0	6

3. "Is there useful work yet to be done under a continued WPA program?"

	Coms.	Mayors
Favorable	81	173
Favorable, with Reservations	5	16
Unfavorable	0	5

While some of the officials were terse in their reports, stating simply "yes" or "no" in reply to the questions, others wrote page-long letters containing many valuable suggestions, according to Mr. Christgau. Some believed that employment should not be restricted to relief clients, but that opportunity of employment should be offered to unemployed who have not been forced to accept relief. From a few scattered areas came the opinion that regulations should call for longer hours of work if the present wage rates are to be continued.

County commissioners were lavish with their praise for the farm-to-market roads, of which more than 6,000 miles have been built in the state by WPA.

Among those who favored the work program with reservations were a number who estimated that "useful and needed work" under the program constituted only about 75 percent of the projects in operation.

One of the reports criticized the type of work being carried out, whereas a large majority stated in detail the permanent value of the work accomplished for their communities.

Of the 295 replies, only 6 said that there is no useful work in their respective areas to be done under a continued program.

SOCIALISTS NOMINATE THOMAS AND NELSON
(Farmers Union Herald)

The Socialist Party in convention at Cleveland, Ohio, nominated Norman Thomas of New York for president and George Nelson of Milltown, Polk County, Wisconsin, for vice president.

Every person who keeps up with the times knows, or knows about, Norman Thomas. George Nelson was for years a member of the Wisconsin legislature and once speaker of the Lower House. In his own county, which is strictly rural, the Socialists polled two years ago, around 2,000 votes.

More than a year ago we predicted that the Socialist party would be the only third party of consequence in 1936, for the reason that the so-called radical leaders in other groups would not jeopardize their chances to trade, in their own behalf, by participating in a third or fourth party.

We also pointed out that any new radical party organized would, in order to distinguish it from the Democratic party, have to adopt the essential principles of the Socialist party and would at once be called a Socialist party whether the founders wished it so or not. Then why indulge in such camouflage?

Wherever monopoly capitalism exists in the world, the essential opposite of such system is Socialism. The radicals of Europe are not afraid to use a name which expresses their ideals and objectives. In this country politicians prefer to try to deceive and bunco their voters.

There should be one conservative party in the United States, which party frankly stands for the capitalist mode of production and distribution, in other words, the profit system.

There should be a liberal party whose objectives should be the reform of the capitalist system.

Finally, there should be a Socialist party whose objectives are essentially the bringing about of the cooperative commonwealth, whereby production for use will take the place of production for profits.

Given these three objectives, the people would soon choose their political parties according to their beliefs and interests. Politicians then could no longer sail under false colors. When we vote we would know what we were voting for instead of guessing about it.

THE CHALLENGE MUST BE MET
(The Minnesota Leader)

The United States Supreme Court, nullifying the New York minimum wage law in a five-to-four decision, served notice on the country that all further attempts to improve social and economic conditions through progressive and liberal legislation is at an end, as long as the court continues to exercise autocratic power.

The die has been cast. The challenge of the court to congress and the people's legislative representatives is now so definite and defiant that direct attack upon the power of the judicial branch of the government is the only way out.

A reactionary congress can be overthrown at the polls, but not so with the Supreme Court. As Senator George W. Norris put it some weeks ago: "The people can change the Congress, but only God can change the Supreme Court."

The issue is clear. Farmers, workers, liberals and radicals must join hands in a fight to drive the Supreme Court back into the corral provided by the Constitution.

This can be accomplished through the proposed constitutional amendment introduced in the Senate by Elmer A. Benson. Moreover, this proposal is in direct harmony with the Farmer-Labor platform adopted at St. Paul on March 28.

The platform proposal, embodied in the Benson resolution, reads:

"An amendment to the Constitution of the United States empowering the Congress to pass laws eliminating child labor, regulating working conditions in industry, regulating agricultural and industrial production, providing security against old age, unemployment and sickness and providing for government ownership of monopolistic industries and banking, except independent banks which stock is locally owned and who are financing independent merchants and farmers."

Here is a definite program upon which all liberals can unite. It provides the only practical solution.

ONLY A MONGREL
(Marshall Messenger)

Of course it's an old car—we don't know that we ought to kick, or even care. But in truth we do care, for even though the machine's six years of age and none too smart-looking any more, it's all we've got, and we really object to having it damaged just as much as the owner of a nice 1936 model would.

We refer to the crumpled fender which some careless or malicious Santa Claus presented us with as a gift while our ancient equipage was parked out of our sight and kindly protection. Whether he backed into us or sideswiped us is immaterial. We can still visualize the incident to its finest details—one sees it happening on other cars, on other old cars, most any day. There's a crunch, a glance over the shoulder, the quick decision that no serious damage has been done, and the driving away with the comforting thought that if a fender was slightly dented, "it's just an old crate, so what's the difference."

But the "old crate's" owner can scarcely find much consolation in that, for more often than not the very fact that he has an old car makes it a hardship or an impossibility to repair the damage inflicted by some of these new whirlwinds equipped with armour-plate bumpers that would shed a six-inch shell.

So one more wound which promises to leave an ugly scar for the rest of its life has been inflicted on our already dilapidated vehicular equipment. And once more we muster about us much admiration for whoever did it as we do for the fellow who hits a dog and leaves it yelping and dying in the street with the indifferent comment of "just another mongrell."

And unfortunately for us, our "pile of junk" still can't be consigned to the junk grel."

FROM THE TOP OF THE HILL
(New Ulm Review)

You know, there's nothing like a hill to put you in your place—not just a gently rising elevation but a real hill, we mean, one that makes you realize you are climbing and that rewards your efforts with a wide view from its summit. There's no better preparation for a week of work than a Sunday afternoon on a hilltop.

Somehow, from the top of a hill you see things in their proper perspective. An automobile is not an absolutely necessary part of your life but merely one of a string of rather amusing toys hurrying along a slender ribbon we call a road. We wonder, as we look down at the valley, what there can possibly be that is worth such mad dashing back and forth. From the top of a hill the very important things of the valley often seem not so important after all.

There's a tonic about a hilltop that works miracles. It hardly seems possible that yesterday we snapped at one of our associates for making a trivial mistake. We can't remember what it was that had us so worried on Monday and Tuesday or what could possibly have kept us awake and doing mental arithmetic most of Wednesday night. Politics and politicians, front page news and editorials are as far away as the voices in the valley we hear ever so faintly when the wind veers in our direction.

Millionaires have been known to squander vast sums on outfitting expeditions to deserted South sea islands. We'll take some hilltop on a Sunday afternoon. They're just as effective—and we can get back in time for supper.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE
(Toyohiko Kagawa in Christian Century)

"As an example of what is possible when international trade is put upon a cooperative basis, consider the wonderful cooperative working agreements between Denmark and England. Denmark sells its farm products to England through the cooperative wholesale associations, and Great Britain buys Danish farm products through the British wholesale consumer cooperatives. On account of this cooperative arrangement, they have an agreement that they will not exploit each other and that they will turn the profits back to the people who have produced them. So they don't need to argue about free trade or a protective tariff. There is no reason for bothering about such things where there is no competitive trade.

"As long as we have international trade based on the competitive system we shall have suspicion between the nations. But if we were to adopt generally such a system as exists for the interchange of goods and services between Denmark and England, we should have a genuine solution for the conflicts involved in commercial policies."

THE BLACK LEGION
(From Tri-County Labor Review)

Discovery of an organization the "Black Legion" which terrorized hundreds of citizens in Michigan while presumably attacking communism is not surprising. The "Black Legion", has its counterpart in dozens of leagues and alliances with fancy-sounding names who are peddling fake propaganda daily and claims as its principle "100 per cent Americanism and anti-communism." This happens also to be the platform of the American Liberty League and other fake outfits.

It is such organizations as these that constitute the real menace to American democracy. It is a pity that we must wait until they commit a legal violence before we can force them to disband. They are daily committing violence of a worse sort by preaching anti-social justice to an America greatly in need of social justice.

THEY DON'T DO IT IN MINNESOTA
(Mille Lacs County Times)

There is a growing feeling of resentment against American workmen—wearing the uniform of the national guard—shooting down other American workmen striking for a fairer division of the profits their energy created.—Major General Butler.

The National Guard does not shoot except under orders, and if orders to shoot are not given there is no shooting by the guard. The action of the national guard depends entirely on who is elected to administer the affairs of the state. Under a Farmer-Labor administration there has been no shooting of working people by the national guard of this state. That is one reason why the big business-controlled press of the state are frothing at the mouth when Governor Olson's sensible handling of strike situations in Minnesota is mentioned.

NOT DEAD YET
(St. Paul Daily News)

Headlined today was the alleged fact that the third party movement has collapsed.

If true, it would be news of the first importance—at least politically. As a matter of fact the Chicago conference carried on more or less the original program as outlined here.

That was to abandon all idea of putting up a presidential ticket this year and to concentrate on the election of as many senators and representatives as possible. Around these, it was hoped, could be built from the bottom up a third party with a top in 1940.

This plan was not abandoned at the Chicago session. It was in fact approved. To herald the death of the third party at this time is, therefore, premature.

Governments the World Over

ENGLAND

The British system of government is that of a limited monarchy. At the apex of the governmental pyramid stands the Crown. The legal powers of the King are still immense. He can legally declare war and make peace. He can disband the army and navy. He is the sole fountain of honor. He can refuse his assent to legislation and dismiss government which commands a majority in the House of Commons. But as a result of a long process of evolution, which effectively begins with the struggle between the Crown and Parliament under the Stuarts, the King has become a dignified influence rather than an active source of power.

He must in fact act upon the advice of his ministers, and it is substantially true that he could not in fact deliberately act counter to their advice without a constitutional revolution. He must be consulted upon all important changes in the policy and officials of the government.

The true executive for practical purposes in the British system is the cabinet. This may be defined as a Committee of the party or parties which can command a majority in the House of Commons.

The pivot of the cabinet is the Prime Minister. He forms the ministry. He personally invites other politicians to accept places in the cabinet; he determines both its size and disposition of offices; it is a convention of the system that he may ask for the resignation of any colleague at any time. He presides over its meetings and largely controls its agenda. He is in fact the essential coordinator of policy and almost a court of appeal between other colleagues in conflict. He largely determines the order and character of legislative business and he is the essential agent in distributing the honors conferred by the Crown. He is further the channel of communication between the King and the cabinet, and it is understood that the power to ask the King to dissolve Parliament belongs to him exclusively.

The average cabinet today consists of 21 to 22 members; 100 years ago its average size was 12. It usually consists of the political heads if the great departments together with two or three ministers who have no effective department and functions; and a special preeminence belongs to the chancellor of the Exchequer as the coordinator of finance and to the foreign secretary.

The legislative assembly of Great Britain consists of the House of Lords and House of Commons. The former is composed of 750 members. Of the total membership barely 50 attend at all regularly. This House is over-whelmingly conservative—there being only 100 liberals and 13 labour peers.

The House of Commons consists of 615 members. A mere plurality suffices to return a member, the parties having consistently since 1867 set their faces against any system of proportional representation. Twenty-one years of age is the voting age for men and women in England. No one under 21 years of age can be a member of Parliament. Clergymen of the Church of England, ministers of the Church of Scotland, and Roman Catholic clergymen are disqualified from sitting as members. Under the Parliament Act, 1918, women are eligible, the first woman member took her seat in Dec. 1919.

Qualifications for the franchise are the same for men and women. Electors, for inclusion in the register must be of full age (21) and have resided or occupied business premises of an annual value of not less than ten pounds, in the same parliamentary borough or county, or one contiguous thereto, for the qualifying period of three months. Every registered voter is entitled to vote at election, but no person may vote at a general election for more than two constituencies for one of which there must be a residential qualification. The secosd vote must rest on this qualification and each vote must be recorded in a different constituency.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT

For the purposes of local government England and Wales are divided primarily into 62 administrative counties including the county of London and 83 county boroughs, the counties are administered by the justices and by a popularly elected council, who co-opt a prescribed number of aldermen, either from their own body or from outside. Aldermen are elected for six years, half of them retiring every third year.

A councilor is elected for three years. The jurisdiction of county officials covers the administration of higher and elementary education, maintenance of main roads, and bridges, looking after relief to agriculture, control of county police, etc.

In each county the Crown is represented by H. M. Lieutenant. There is also a sheriff, who represents the executive of the Crown, under-sheriff, a clerk of peace and a clerk of the county council, coroners, who are appointed by the county councils and other officers.

Area, 50,874 square miles—Population, 37,794,002.

(An interesting commentary is that the nobility along with the lunatics, insane and criminals are disqualified from voting. This disqualification is no doubt due to the belief that the nobility have representation in the House of Lords.)

Government Leads the Way

In 1928 Congress recognized the seriousness of soil erosion in this country and appropriated funds for the establishment of a number of Regional Erosion Experiment Stations to be located on errosive lands in different parts of the United States. One of these was established near LaCrosse, Wisconsin, where land conditions are typical of southeastern Minnesota and southwestern Wisconsin. The purpose of the experiment station was to devise and test methods and practices for the reduction of soil losses.

Subsequently there has been established a federal bureau, known as the Soil Conservation Service, in the United States Department of Agriculture. This bureau has been given jurisdiction over the erosion experiment stations, and has also been made responsible for demonstrating the use of erosion control measures and practices on farms in suitable areas.

The following soil erosion control demonstration projects have been established in Minnesota:

(1) Gilmore Creek watershed in Winona County; (2) Beaver Creek watershed in Houston county; (3) Deer and Bear Creek in Fillmore and Mower counties, and (4) Prairie Creek in Rice County. In these areas more than 200 farmers have established systems of erosion control on their entire farms.

The Soil Conservation Service is also directing erosion control work of the same type in 12 Civilian Conservation Corps areas in southeastern Minnesota.

Cooperating farmers in general have expressed much satisfaction with this service. Many more applications have been received than these agencies have been able to fulfill.

Soil conservation is best practiced on farms where the damage has not yet become serious. The owners or operators of such farms, however, sometimes have difficulty in realizing that such losses may some day become serious. Too often they become aroused only after their fields have become scarred with gullies or the top soil swept away by wind. By that time, crop yields have usually fallen to a point that makes farming unprofitable.

VIEWS AND REVIEWS

By Ben C. Hasglund

More Trouble

All civilized Christians ought to help prevent the massacre preparing in Ethiopia. It is reported that Ethiopian tribes are gathering to swoop down upon the defenseless Italians at Addis Ababa. Although Mussolini's men have penetrated to the capital of the black nation, it must not be supposed that he has subdued the country. Far from it. His troops occupy only a scant two fifths of the territory.

But that makes it all the worse. The heathen Ethiopians, satisfied with nothing, are liable to do anything. When the fascists attempted to civilize them, they ungenerously allowed their anger to run away with them; they protested too barbarously when the Italians gently burned their homes and drove them out; and now it is reported that they are out for blood—vengeance—and for what? Vengeance is a poor excuse for starting trouble. (Note: This does not refer to the harking back to Adowa, the defeat of 1896 which was never revenged until Italians sacked Ethiopia. That was simply "protecting the national honor".)

Therefore, if you have not already done so, American mothers and sweethearts, respond now to this call for gold, and more gold—renounce your rings and bracelets for this noble cause—and some day you, too, will receive a nicely-engraved steel ring or bracelet from Il Duce himself, and will share in the generous feeling that you have done somthing for civilization! Remember, gold will do it—gold, gold, and more gold. Judging from what it has accomplished, even the League of Nations may be won over from their barbaric insistence upon the rights of Haile Selassie. I believe one piece of gold would do it—more likely, thirty pieces of silver.

The Rust Brothers

John and Mack Rust, inventors of a cotton-picking machine, are in a dilemma—that is, up a stump. They are inventors, and they want to do something good for mankind; but how can that occur when anything they may invent only increase misery? They can see that the cotton-picker they invented will not do as much good as harm, for it will only aggravate the labor problem the more, when laborers are working long hours for 75c a day.

So the Rust Brothers have figured and figured, and evolved several plans for distributing their machines. Under one plan they would sell the machine, but each purchaser would have to place the men the machine displaced, in other jobs. Another plan would be to only lease the machine, and sign up the lessee under an agreement to care for all displaced laborers. The Rust Brothers have also thought of a trust fund to be built up from profits of sale or lease of their machine, such fund to be used in rehabilitating laborers displaced by the machine.

There is one significant feature in their program—they will sell machines without question to the Soviet Union, for they realize that there labor-saving machines are a blessing, and not a curse, and actually save labor, not increase misery.

The Rust Brothers haven't decided yet exactly what they are going to do. Under any plan, they are bound to hurt labor. The system demands it. They are progressive enough to see that, and having been laborers themselves, feel it all the more. They illustrate the frustration of the modern inventor.

—O—

Hearst and the Black Klan

Although he was one of the most horrified at the actions of the Black Klan, to judge from accounts in his newspapers, William Randolph Hearst was undoubtedly the instigator of the outrages, simply because it is but a step from the flaying that labor organizers and "foreign agitators" received in the Hearst press, to the physical action used by the Black Klanmen. Hearst's policy of printing inflammatory articles against labor, and raising "red scares" wherever possible, lent boldness to the actions of the Black Klan.

The investigation headed by Senator Benson should uncover many things—chiefly the hookup by which the Klan received its "sanction" to operate.

Minute Sermon

By Dr. Crawford Grays

We tend to think covetously of wealth and fame and position.

We tend to feel that life is defrauding us and hard to us when these things are not ours. Because they are not for us we look upon life and others more favored with a degree of bitterness.

Certainly, life for hundreds of people is full of perplexity. There are those who try to live up to commendable ideals; there are those who struggle and deny self for the good of others yet hit by "tough" misfortune; one discouragement quickly followed by others make for unbelief.

Fine people promising youth are hit by disease or death while some good-for-nothings live on, as do the weak-minded and the aged praying for death. Ideals and confidences are shattered by the failure of those in whom we had placed trust.

It is not difficult to think of life as an awful muddle. Injustice and confusion stalk across our path. Valuable things are discounted and "get by" ideas pay big.

But, ultimately, right triumphs over the wrong; the character-fit survive. And somehow, someway, we will discover that all things contribute for the ascendary of truth and justice.

THE TRIBUNE'S STRAW VOTE

The Chicago Tribune has been conducting a straw vote. It has been trying to determine who, among the various presidential possibilities stands highest in popular favor.

* * * *

When one pauses to consider that the Chicago Tribune is so staunchly Republican that when it rains at the Party's headquarters in New York, Col. McCormick, the Tribune's publisher, rolls up his pants in Chicago, one understands, not only the ostensible reasons why the poll was undertaken, but even get some hints of less obvious reasons. . .

On the surface, it appears that the straw vote was taken, for the purpose of showing, honestly and fairly, just which of the Republican contenders—Landon, Borah, Vandenberg, Knox, Dickinson, Taft—was the popular choice. . .

But beneath the surface, one glimpses another reason, however slyly it may be hidden . . . which is to prove how badly Mr. Roosevelt has fallen in popularity. The Tribune has ranted and raved so long and loudly about the iniquities of the 'New Deal' that it doubtless felt very certain that it had by this time, brought the voters around to much the same view . . .

Wherefore the ballot was so arranged that Democratic voters, too, might indicate their choice—if there were any Roosevelt followers left in Illinois, that is to say.

* * * *

But the Tribune should have contented itself with a Republican ballot only. For it soon developed that it had committed a serious tactical blunder in placing Mr. Roosevelt's name on the ballot.

The outcome of the straw vote was distressingly different from what the Tribune had confidently expected. It back-fired like an old Model "T".

When the Tribune saw the alarming turn the ballot was taking, it would probably gladly have abandoned the whole project. But it had gone too far to turn back.

* * * *

Indeed, as the poll progressed, the Tribune found itself in much the same position as the Frenchman. . .

He and his partner spied a bear up in a tree. Said he to his companion:

"I go up catch him! You wait here and I bring him down!"

A moment or two after he had disappeared up among the branches, a great commotion took place. His pal called up to him, anxiously:

"Pete! Shall I come up and help you hold him?"

"No!" panted Pete. "Come up and help me let go him!"

* * * *

Among the Republican contenders, Alf M. Landon led by a considerable margin.

Which quite pleased the Tribune, for it is partial to Landon.

* * * *

Day by day, as the returns came in, the results were tabulated and published in the Tribune. And day by day, the Tribune learnedly commented on the meaning of the result, from this angle and that. It took the returns apart and sagely studied them through strong spectacles.

* * * *

But there was one small phase of the straw poll to which the Tribune called no more attention than was absolutely necessary, and that was the Democratic votes cast.

And from the Tribune's standpoint, it can be understood that the less said about it, the better.

For when one studies the figures, he discovers that out of a grand total of about 74,000 votes cast for all candidates, both Republican and Democratic, President Roosevelt polled more than all the others together. He got over 42,000!

Which, from a Republican viewpoint, and from the view-point of the Tribune, must be a sad state of affairs. . . particularly in a State such as Illinois, which has always, heretofore, been considered safely Republican.

* * * * *

So if someone should happen to catch Col. McCormick, pacing up and down the floor, biting his fingernails and muttering to himself, he will understand the reason.

* * *

ORISON SWET MARDEN ON "PSYCHOLOGY"

(From 1903 magazine article)

"Some people act like a tonic or an invigorating and refreshing breeze. They make us feel like new beings. Under the inspiration of their presence, we can say and do things which it would be impossible for us to say and do under different conditions. One stimulates my thoughts, quickens my intellect, opens the floodgates of language and sentiment and awakens the poetic within me, while another dampens my enthusiasm, closes the door of expansion, and chills me to the very center of my being. There emanates from him an atmosphere which paralyzes thought, dwarfs expression".

ALCOHOL WARNING

Recognizing the fact that liquor and gasoline do not mix well, authorities in Berlin, with each driver's license, give a police card on which is printed the following:

"The smallest quantities of alcohol are injurious to the motor driver. It is a widespread error that small quantities have no deleterious effect. On the contrary they cause at first an increase of self-confidence, followed by premature fatigue, and thus weaken one's capacity for swift discrimination and re-action in the presence of danger".

Though Germany is a beer-drinking nation, beer is listed on the card as one of the tabooed beverages.

Clever Constable

The young village constable was undergoing an examination for promotion.

"Suppose," said the examiner, "that you are accosted, late one evening, by a charming young lady who tells you that a strange young man has embraced and kissed her. What would you do?"

The constable answered without hesitation:

"I should endeavor, sir, to reconstruct the crime, with the young lady's assistance."

OLSON—CHRISTIANSON VOWS SPOKEN SUNDAY MORNING

At an early morning service read by Reverend R. M. Fjelstad at the Trinity Lutheran Parsonage at nine o'clock Sunday, June 14, Miss Lilah Olson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Olson of this city, and Mr. Arthur Christianson, son of Mr. and Mrs Thomas Christianson of Badger, Minnesota, were united in marriage. The vows were spoken in the presence of Miss Mabel Stokke, bridesmaid, and Charles Christianson of Roseau, brother of the groom, best man. The bride's gown was of wood violet Bemberg crepe, with which she wore white patent leather accessories. Her attendant wore a como blue knit dress and white accessories.

Following the ceremony, a wedding breakfast was served at the home of the bride's parents, following which the bride and groom left on a motor trip along the North Shore and to the Twin Cities. They will be at home at 702 Atlantic Avenue after July 15.

The bride is a graduate of the Lincoln high school with the class of '34. She is employed with the Montgomery Ward company store in this city. Mr. Christianson is warehouse manager for the L. B. Hartz Co., Inc.

STANTON DAHLEN AND VICTORIA EDBERG WED

The marriage of Miss Victoria Edberg, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Edberg of Stanchfield, Minnesota, and Stanton Dahlen, son of Mrs. H. S. Dahlen of this city, was solemnized at a four o'clock service in the Lutheran church at Rush Point, Minnesota, Friday afternoon, June 12. The service was read by Reverend Ford, pastor of the Rush Point church.

At the opening of the service, the groom and groomsman, Lieutenant C. A Dahlen of Fort Snelling, took their places before the altar. Leading the bridal procession was the flower girl, Katherine Vorachek, small daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Vorachek of this city, who was dressed in a blue georgette dress and carried a blue basket of varied colored flowers. The ushers, Mr. Earl Ecklund and Myron Edberg, brother-in-law and brother of the bride respectively, preceeded the bride's attendants. The bride's attendants were her niece, Miss Adele Jewell, junior bridesmaid, Miss Rosine Dahlen, bridesmaid, and the bride's sister, Mrs. Earl Ecklund, matron of honor. Both bridesmaids wore powder blue floor-length gowns and carried bouquets. Mrs. Ecklund's gown was a floorlength one of yellow organdy.

The bride entered alone wearing a fitted gown of white mousseline de soie with a slight train over which she wore a long bridal veil of silk net. She carried an all-white bouquet of calla lillies, Easter lillies, and roses. Nuptial music was played softly throughout the service by Mrs. C A. Dahlen.

Midland Holds Annual Meeting

The Tenth Annual Meeting of the Midland Cooperative Wholesale, held June 9 at the plant and the headquarters in Minneapolis, and attended by over five hundred people from the 150 cooperatives which are members of the Midland made several important decisions affecting the conduct of the business and the future of the organization.

Of first importance was the adoption of a five year revolving fund plan whereby the patronage earnings of the local associations from Midland will be paid in cash after five years, provided common stock requirements are met. By this action the delegates settled a most important issue which has been discussed at many previous meetings. It was the general feeling of the convention that the wholesale needs the earnings made through its operation, and therefore this means will continue to be taken to supply the necessary operating capital. In accord with this plan the Freeborn County Cooperative Oil Association of Albert Lea, which is the first of the members to meet common stock requirements, will this year be paid over $1600.00 in cash as its earnings for the years 1928-29-30 in excess of such requirements.

The delegates also concurred in recommendation of the board of directors that $30,00 of the $63,000 net earnings of 1935 be set aside as reserve to provide additional capital. The balance will be issued in stock to member associations

The general manager, E. G. Cort, reported sales in 1935 of $2,423,106.55, an increase of about 38 per cent over the previous year. Midland handled 4004 tank cars of gasoline in 1935 as compared with 3209 in 1934. Twenty-nine cooperatives joined the Midland during the year, a few being old associations but most of them new. This brings the total number of associations buying from the wholesale cooperative to about 200, of which 150 are active buying members.

The main address of the day was delivered by J. T. Hull, editor of the Manitoba Cooperator of Winnipeg, and secretary of the Manitoba Cooperative Conference, a joint educational organization of all cooperatives in that province. Mr. Hull emphasized the idea that men must act together in order to achieve the best results in terms of human welfare. In an age of power the potentialties of production have been multiplied many times, but yet we see human beings starve and lack decent clothing and proper shelter. "In the existing order", said Mr. Hull, "you cannot reconcile value or wealth and plenty. Cooperation aims to place a new interpretation on wealth, that of human well-being or welfare, which must be the first and last consideration of the cooperative movement." The organized purchasing power of the masses is a means by which the people may secure the control of power production to serve themselves in a world of plenty "Cooperation does not mean a world of scarcity, but a world of plenty," declared Mr. Hull.

The following board of directors, placed in nomination by the ten districts of the Midland trade area, was elected to serve for the ensuing year: C. D. Clipfell, Redwood Falls, Minnesota; F. H. Osborne, Albert Lea, Minnesota; H. P. Brandt, Morris, Minnesota; Henry T. Johnson, Audubon, Minnesota; P. F. Pearson, Lancaster, Minnesota; John Vandermyde, Mora, Minnesota; E. E. Kulp, Cumberland, Wisconsin; Erich Lenz, Merrill, Wisconsin; Jerry Shea, Pickett, Wisconsin; Wm. Kittleson, Blanchardville, Wis.

Farm Women Applaud Mrs. Catt's Peace Plea

Washington—"Listen! Do you farm women not know that war keeps you poor; that your nation spends too much money for guns, airplanes and poison gas, and too little for farm welfare?"

This was the question flung by Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, militant worker for peace, at the 1,500 representatives of the Associated Country Women of the World gathered here in convention the week of June 1.

Dubbing war as "Enemy No. 1 of everything that is good in the world," she continued: "Do you know that every nation builds too many warships and too few friendships? Do you not know that the worst blow to your farm would be the death of your son or sons on a battlefield?"

"Say these things to your family, your husband, your sons, your neighbors. Will they pronounce you a fanatic? They will, and it is by the activity of fanatics alone that war will be abolished. Make fanatics of your family and neighbors and you will not feel lonesome."

When Mrs. Catt finished speaking the throngs of women representing twenty-three nations of the world rose to acclaim her.

Earlier in the conference the farm women decided to adopt a project involving the international exchange of handicraft through which they hope to help cement worldwide understanding and friendship.

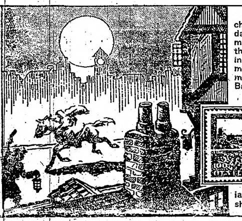
AT the eastern tip of beautiful Lake Constance, in the Austrian Tyrol, lies quaint, picturesque Bregenz, a thousand-year-old city whose people cherish a patriotic legend.

It is the story of a restless village maiden who, some 300 years ago, left Bregenz to make her home and a living across the lake in Switzerland. Years passed, and the girl seemed to have forgotten her native home and her kindred, when one day she overheard whisperings of a plan to attack Bregenz that night. The conspiracy awakened the girl to the call of her home land and her kinsfolk. She had only a few hours in which to act.



Jumping on a white charger, she fled through the darkness. At the stroke of midnight the horse brought the maiden, with her warning cry, to Bregenz. By morning, the city's battlements were manned and Bregenz was saved.

Nightly, for many years, thereafter, the village watchman, calling the midnight hour, sang out the maiden's name. Today a stone gateway commemorates this girl's valiant deed. The city is shown on a stamp of 1923.

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—The Duke, a pleasant, likable youth of twenty-three, jobless and broke, enters an unoccupied summer home in Southampton, seeking shelter from a terrific rain storm. He makes himself at home. Six years ago his father had died in China, leaving the lad, Barry Gilbert, to fight his way back to the States. He did not recollect ever having had a mother. Dozing at the fireside, he is startled by the arrival of a butler, Willetts; a chauffeur, Evans; a cook and a maid. He learns that the son of the owner of the house, Jack Ridder, whom the servants had never seen, is expected. He decides to bluff it out. His supposed parents have left for Germany. Next morning he is given a letter for his "mother." He opens it and finds a message from the real Jack, saying he could not come, and returning a hundred-dollar bill. The boy's father had pensioned him into obscurity. Barry pockets the money, intending to return it later. He orders Evans to take him to Montauk, intending to disappear there. On the way he assists Judge Hambidge and his daughter, Patricia, whose car had broken down. Believing he is Jack Ridder, she invites him to dinner the following Thursday.

CHAPTER II.—Barry returns to Southampton, deciding to stay a bit longer. Mr. Ridder, Sr., through his newspaper, the Globe, accuses Judge Hambidge of taking orders from Tammany Hall in a condemnation proceeding. Barry meets Peter Winslow, prominent attorney. Winslow tells Barry that Judge Hambidge had seen an accident in which a woman was killed by a taxicab. At home Barry finds the wife of the real Jack Ridder awaiting him. Her husband is in jail in New York, charged with the murder of Mike Kelly, Tammany boss.

"'"Your wife!" he said, "Yes, and I guess anybody's wife that wants her!"

"'"Don't say that," I asked him.

"'"I'll say anything I damn please!" he shouted. "Who the hell are you, telling me what to say? A guy living off a girl at Spanish Luis Morano's! Well, I don't give a damn who you live off, but when Luis sics 'em on to lifting stuff out o' my pocket, they got the wrong bird! This dame's going to jail tomorrow, and I'm going to headquarters myself to be sure she goes! Now, get out!" he says.'

"Well, of course, Jack loses his temper. They yelled at each other a few minutes, and then Jack says he calmed down. '"Listen,"' he says, as quietly as I'm talking now. '"I don't amount to much, and I guess I know it as well as you do. But you let up on my wife, or I'll never let up on you as long as I live—so help me!"'

"And, with that, he flounces out of the house.

"'Did you bang the door?' I asked, trying to make him laugh.

"'I banged both of 'em,' he answered. 'The door from the drawing room into the hall, and the front door. I mean what I said, too. If you're arrested tomorrow—'"

She paused for a moment, and slumped back into her chair, as though completely exhausted.

"You'll find the rest in the paper," she concluded. "The cops picked him up about three o'clock this afternoon. He thought they'd come for me, first, and he said a few things about Kelly that aren't going to help much. I don't know yet why they didn't pick me up, too. Anyway, when they'd gone, I did a whole lot of thinking. And I decided this wasn't a good minute for pride, or anything. 'If they're going to separate us,' I said, 'why, they're going to, and that's that.' So I took a chance, and the first train I could get after I'd found somebody to look after the boy. When the butler told me Mr. Ridder'd be home around midnight, I figured my luck had changed. Of course, I never thought of a fake Ridder."

There was no ill-will in her tone; only a faint amusement, succeeded, almost immediately, by desperate earnestness.

"Well, that's my story," she said. "God only knows why I told you. I came here to tell it because I didn't think even that tough old bird would want to see his boy sent up for murder. Now—what do we do? Cable? I haven't got money enough; have you? I haven't got a lawyer, or a dollar to hire one. I haven't got a relative that I know about, or a friend in the world. Just a sick kid at home, and a fellow I'm kind of strong for locked up in the Tombs."

She had asked, "What do we do?" "I haven't got money enough; have you?" Taken him into partnership; that's what she had. Into one of those natural, inevitable partnerships of people who have no one to whom they have the right to turn; the kinship of the poor, and despised, and outcast.

"I know a great lawyer," said the Duke. "A great criminal lawyer. I met him tonight. A fellow named Winslow."

"Not Peter Winslow?"

The Duke nodded.

"Yes, he's great enough, but he'd never take my case."

"He might take mine," the Duke mused, aloud. "We struck up quite a friendship. He offered to get me a job. Of course, that's all off, because—"

"Because why?"

"Because he isn't going to do anything for me when he finds I'm a fake. Nobody is, when they know I'm not John Clarke Ridder, Jr."

The Duke rose, slowly, and walked across the room.

He was thinking hard.

"Nobody is," he repeated, still more slowly, as he returned to the chair in which was sitting the wife of the real "Jack" Ridder. "But why should they find out now?"

The girl looked at him, wide-eyed.

"I don't get you."

"It's easy," he answered, still slowly, and very deliberately. "People don't do anything for fakes, or cast-offs accused of murder. They won't do anything for the real John Ridder, because he's broke and in disgrace. But they might do a lot for the fake John Ridder—if they didn't know he was a fake."

"I guess I'm dumb," Peggy said, "but still I don't get you."

"Listen."

He resumed his seat in the small chair opposite her.

"You came out to get old John Clarke to help you."

"Yes."

"And he wasn't here."

"No."

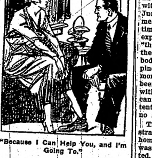
"That was a lucky break for you, because, if he'd been here, he'd've had you chucked right out of the front door. Think, kid! He hasn't spoken to his son for years. Paid him fifty dollars a week not to use the family name. And then a cabaret girl turns up to say she's married the boy, and he committed murder—or was accused of it—because somebody caught her picking pockets in a night-club."

"It doesn't sound good—the way you put it."

"That's nothing to the way he'd put it. But he's not here. And that's not the best of your luck. The best of your luck is that I am."

"Why?"

"Because I can help you, and I'm going to. I am—if you'll let me. If you'll let me go on being John Clarke Ridder, Jr."



"Because I Can Help You, and I'm Going To."

"Oh, that's the game, is it?"

"Listen. John Clarke Ridder, fake, can be the best friend John Clarke Ridder, real, ever had in his life. I can get Winslow to take your case, if he don't know I'm a fake. I can get Judge Hambidge to use his influence, and that's plenty. I can get money from home, because I'm making good. Look—read that!"

He darted across the room, and to the table drawer, returning with the letter from Mrs. Ridder.

"Read it quick! 'Any shock might prove serious. He must change his will.' And he still reads the papers. All right. What if he does read about a bum, named Jay Rogers, that married a night-club girl and is on trial for killing a Tammany boss. Jay Rogers don't mean a thing. But, if he reads that John Clarke Ridder, Jr., did all this, on top of everything else he's done, what's the answer?"

"What's the answer if he don't?"

"The answer then is that a noble young fellow, named John Clarke Ridder — and that's me — gets a whole lot interested in an unfortunate guy named Jay Rogers. Why? Because he believes him to be innocent—that's why. And, don't make any mistake, a guy like Ridder believing it's going to start a lot of other people believing it, too. I write my mother that I've got to have money to carry on the fight, and I get it, because the old man decides I can't be so bad, after all. Maybe he gets his newspaper into the scrap — not for his own son, which wouldn't help much, but for a stranger. Whether that happens or not, I'll get a job and a lawyer, and use 'em both for you. I'll use all the family influence for you. And, when it's over, and your husband's acquitted, I'll be in some position to talk to the old man for you."

"What if he isn't acquitted?"

"You've got to face that chance, either way."

Peggy looked at him with hard eyes.

"You're a pretty smart fellow," she said. "Pretty smart—if you can talk me into keeping my mouth shut while you get the money, and the position, and everything my husband ought to have."

"Will he get it if I don't? Use your nut, Peggy. What do I gain? If you spill the beans tonight, what good does it do you? And what harm does it do me? Maybe I go to jail for a few weeks. But it don't get your husband out of jail, does it? This way might, and it's the only way. Think it over."

"Will you answer me one question?" the girl asked.

"Shoot."

"If you've nothing to gain, why are you doing this?"

The Duke had been pacing the room. He stopped short now, and his clenched hands fell limp at his sides.

"Damned if I know," he responded. "And that's the truth."

They could hear the clock ticking in the hall.

Then it struck two.

"All right," Peggy said, at last. "I'm going to play it your way. Where do we go from here?"

"I think you'd better go to bed," the Duke answered.

"Here?"

"Why not?" grinned the Duke. "You've got a whole lot more right here than I have. There's a guest-room that Willetts always keeps ready."

The girl hesitated.

"What time can I get back to New York?" she asked.

"There's a good train around nine o'clock."

"All right."

Barry opened a door the other side of the library, and switched on the lights. "There you are," he said.

"All right."

"It just struck me," he remarked. "You don't suppose your husband might have given his real name?"

"No. But that's one reason I want to get back. You better come with me, too. I think you're on the level, but I'm not so sure Jack's going to think so."

"O. K.," Barry assented. "Breakfast at eight. Good night, Mrs. Rogers."

"Good night, Mr. Ridder."

She smiled, a wan ghost of a smile.

Standing before the dying fire, Barry exclaimed: "What a damned fool I am!" and stuffed the letter into his pocket. The newspaper lay before him, and, with it, he came back to the hearth. "Let's see what it's all about," he said.

The story filled the first page, and overflowed onto the second and third. Judge Hambidge's eagerly-awaited decision was crowded into an upper corner of the fourth page, with a two-column picture of the Judge. There was no editorial comment. Evidently, there hadn't been time for that yet. "For some unexplained reason," the paper said, "the murder was not reported to the police until nearly noon." The body had been found by the Filipino servant shortly after eight that morning. Mike Kelly's skull had been fractured by a single blow with a heavy cut-glass whiskey decanter that lay close by, its contents still undisturbed. There was no sign of a struggle.

The Filipino boy's yarn was straight enough. Kelly had come home just before eleven o'clock. He was a little drunk, the boy admitted. He had let himself in with his latch-key, and gone straight to the dining room, where he rang violently. The boy had responded, and got out the liquor and the glasses. Then a young man had called. His name was Rogers, the boy remembered, and he said he had known Kelly in Palm Beach. Kelly had said, "All right; show him into the drawing room," and the boy had done so, and brought in the tray. Then he had gone back downstairs to the servants' quarters.

A little while later, he had heard angry voices in the drawing room, and had listened outside, in the hall. What he had heard was pretty much what the girl had repeated, but there were a few additions, in the way of threats from the visitor. The Filipino decided that it was none of his business, and returned to his room. Ten minutes later, anxious in spite of himself, he remounted the back stairs. As he reached the top, he heard the drawing room door closed noisily, and saw the caller hurry into the hall and through the front door, which he banged after him. It was then nearly midnight. The Filipino had been on duty since seven that morning, and, reassured, he tiptoed down the stairs, and went to bed. That was all he knew until, eight hours later, he came upon Mike Kelly's body lying face-down on the floor.

The Duke was just about to go to bed himself, when he noticed a small headline, "Artist's Wife Crushed by Taxi." That would be the accident that upset Judge Hambidge.

State Assured Fed. Road Aid Two Years

The Hayden-Cartwright federal aid bill recently passed by Congress will make the following sums available for highway construction in Minnesota for each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1938 and 1939:

Regular Federal aid	$3,423,306
Secondary Roads	680,000
Grade separations	1,350,000

Regular federal aid and aid for secondary roads must be matched 50-50 with state funds. Since 1933 when auto license fees were reduced and 4,600 miles added to the state highway system, gas and auto license revenue has nearly all been needed for maintenance and debt service. Federal aid for the current biennium was met by state highway bond issues. Some additional funds must be provided, one way or another, if Minnesota wants to get federal aid for the next two years.

If regular federal aid matched with state funds for the two years could all go into concrete, it would pave 550 miles of highway. This amount of paving on heavy traffic routes would make a big cut in annual maintenance costs, and leave more of future highway revenue for more new construction. It would also mean large savings to car and truck owners in all parts of the state.

The allotment for grade separations is an outright grant, but the state must furnish necessary right of way and engineering service. It may be used either for railway-highway separations, grade separations at highway intersections, elimination of grade crossings by highway re-location or for crossing protection.

Wolf Regains

closest race is between Lindsten and Townsend for lieutenant governor and Townsend strength is believed to lay in his name which may be linked in the minds of many people with Dr. Townsend of revolving pensions fame.

Theo. Christianson leads Mrs. Schall for the republican senatorial nomination three to one and Martin Nelson leads A. B. Gilbert by the length of the state. Arthur E. Nelson leads Ellsworth for lieutenant governor and it seems likely that there will be a surplus of Nelsons on the republican ticket, altho it is possible that Ellsworth may overtake Nelson the second in the final count.

The fiery campaign staged in the final two weeks before the election by the Wolf democrats has staged a complete upset in that party and the Wolfmen appear to have won five out of seven state nominations contested. Wolfmen are leading in most of the congressional contests also with Frank Timm, Wolf nominee in the ninth apparently lost to Martin Brandon, democratic nominee of two years ago by a close margin.

The Thief River team traveled to Warren Tuesday evening for a twilight game with the fast club representing that city—and returned home later in the evening on the short end of a 14 to 6 score. The game was a non-league contest and will be one of several twilight exhibitions to be played in the next few weeks.

Young pitching prospects on the local club were used in this contest, with Floyd Olson pitching very effective ball for four innings of the game.

A return contest will be played with the Warren team on the Thief River diamond Friday evening of next week, the contest to be another twilight affair. Revenge is in the eyes of the locals and Warren is scheduled to get a neat trimming in this meeting.

This test, can be passed by the average person in six to eight lessons, and will overcome the fear of water which most persons possess.

Youth Congress to be On the Air July 4th

Cleveland (YNS)—Young America will get an opportunity to air its woes—if the radio officials don't back down.

Officers of the American Youth Congress who expect delegates representing more than 2,000,000 organized young people to attend their Third Youth Congress to be held here on July 4 took a tip from the coming political conventions.

Both the Democratic and Republican conventions are making elaborate preparations for broadcasting from the floor. Microphones hidden in lapel flowers and other stunts are being prepared. Youth Congress officers reasoned that their convention might be just as interesting, and maybe easier for a tired radio audience to swallow.

Radio officials, button-holed by AYC officers, listened and agreed. A special sensitive mike on the platform will pick up the speeches and resolutions, as well as extraneous remarks of the delegates.

Legion Convention

about 25,000 people who witnessed the parades Sunday.

The convention next year will be held in this city some time in the middle of June and will continue from Saturday through Monday.

The prize for being the first group to arrive at Fergus Falls was won by the Thief River Falls auxiliary drum corps. They arrived in the city on Saturday noon. The drum corps distinguished themselves by taking a very active part in the convention activities. No drum corps competition was held this year.

First place in the convention parade was won by the Ninth District Legion band. The band was under the direction of E. L. Egermayer, who took the place of the regular leader T. W. Thorson of Crookston. The band also won first prize for being the largest musical group in the parade.

Crippled Children's Clinics Open June 20

Launching Minnesota's Social Security program for Crippled Children, two Orthepedic Clinics, the first of a series of 12, are slated for this month. They will be held at Moorhead, June 20 and at Crookston, June 27.

Clinic services will include medical examination of physically handicapped persons under 21 years of age, consultation with the family physician, recommendation for transportation service to school and consultation on training for future employment. Examiners will be members of the Minnesota-Dakota Orthopedic Club. Vocational advice will be provided through the Division of Re-Education, Minnesota Department of Education.

These clinics are not a new activity in the state. They were inaugurated many years ago by the Minnesota Public Health Association and have been financed annually by Christmas Seal funds. Their value demonstrated, the clinics have been made a part of the Social Security program for the state and will be financed by government funds in the future. The state Christmas Seal organization will continue to take an active part in the educational and organization work in connection with the clinics.

Orthopedic clinics are only one phase of the comprehensive program for the benefit of Minnesota's crippled children made possible through the Social Security appropriation. The new division of Crippled Children's Services will have charge of this program under the direction of Dr. H. E. Hillebpe, head of the tuberculosis division of the State Board of Control. An advisory committee, consisting of representatives of leading organizations in the state interested in the physically handicapped, has been appointed.

The annual $50,000 federal allotment will make possible a census of all crippled children in the state, will provide medical, surgical and corrective care and facilities for diagnosis, hospitalization, and after-care of physically handicapped children. Provision is also made for a public health nursing staff, members of which will go in to the homes of physically handicapped children to assist them in carrying out the instructions of the physicians in charge.

It is estimated that there are approximately 10,000 crippled children in the state. Because facilities in the state hospitals for indigent children are not sufficient to care for all those needing this type of care, funds available from the government will make possible the hospitalization of indigent children in other hospitals through out the state.

Bonus Veterans May be Put Off Relief Rolls

If the plan of certain relief agencies to take war veterans now on relief off relief rolls when they receive their bonus is carried out it will be tantamount to telling war veterans who are out of work that they shall receive no benefit whatever from the bonus, the government has given them....

At this writing an effort is being made in Minneapolis to take war veterans off the relief line if they receive adjusted service certificates in excess of $300. Veterans who are receiving a bonus have received notice from the Executive Council, War Veterans Relief Agency, that they will receive no further relief orders because of that fact....

If this is carried out it will be in conflict with the true spirit of the bonus, the benefits of which are to accrue to all veterans regardless of their economic status as a reward for the service they rendered to a thankful government. The bonus for the ex-service man who is out of work then becomes a mere mockery.

Amendment 2 Will Reduce School Aid

"The money lost if Amendment 2 passes providing 'that after January 1, 1937, no tax shall be imposed on any real or tangible personal property for any state purpose except the one mill tax for roads' will have to be made up from other sources already overburdened or from new sources which will overtax those least able to pay," said Mrs. Myrtle Hooper Dahl, regional director of the National Classroom Teachers Association, Monday, June 15 on the final "North Star School" broadcast for the spring months sponsored by the Minnesota Education Association over WCCO. "To eliminate the one mill school tax, the proposed amendment will cut $1,400,000 from the apportioned state aid. This would be about $3.50 per pupil."

Walter E Englund, field director of the M. E. A., in a radio interview with Supt. F. G. Brandes of Howard Lake, June 8, pointed out that failure of the state to pay supplemental aid in full causes the poorer school districts in the state to be burdened with tax levies beyond their power to pay, or reduces the school services such districts can give their children. "The education of the child," said Mr. Englund, "is a common responsibility and whenever the resources of the local community are insufficient to provide a minimum basic training for the children the resources of the state must be thrown into the balance, and the pledged assistance of the state paid in full".

The broadcasts concluded the spring series sponsored by the M. E. A. over a seven weeks period. Speakers on the programs have included: N. Robert Ringdahl, principal of Corcoran School, Minneapolis, chairman of the radio committee; Miss Daisy Brown, Stillwater, past president of the M. E. A.; Dean Floyd B. Moe, Virginia Junior College, president of the M. E. A.; President Lotus D. Coffman, University of Minnesota; President Frank D. McElroy, Mankato State Teachers College; Edgar E. Sharp, Moorhead, president of the Minnesota School Board Association; Mr. Englund, and Mrs. Dahl. The speakers have been assisted by Ramon L. Irwin, University of Minnesota; Supt. Myron E. Smith, Canby; Supt. S. G. Reinertsen, of Moorhead; Supt. F. G. Brandes, of Howard Lake. Music has been furnished by School groups from Northfield, St. Cloud, South High School, Minneapolis, Sleepy Eye, Mountain Lake, Chisholm, and Aitkin.

The committee in charge of the series included in addition to the chairman, Mr. Ringdahl, and the field director, Mr. Englund, G. H. Sanberg, Rochester, Otto Haack, Pine River, R. R. Sorenson, Tracy, Harold Larson, Milaca, Thomas Christoffel, St. Paul, Barbara Sengir, Minneapolis, Andrew Meldahl, Duluth, and S. G. Reinertsen, of Moorhead.

closest race is between Lindsten and Townsend for lieutenant governor and Townsend strength is believed to lay in his name which may be linked in the minds of many people with Dr. Townsend of revolving pensions fame.

Theo. Christianson leads Mrs. Schall for the republican senatorial nomination three to one and Martin Nelson leads A. B. Gilbert by the length of the state. Arthur E. Nelson leads Ellsworth for lieutenant governor and it seems likely that there will be a surplus of Nelsons on the republican ticket, altho it is possible that Ellsworth may overtake Nelson the second in the final count.

The fiery campaign staged in the final two weeks before the election by the Wolf democrats has staged a complete upset in that party and the Wolfmen appear to have won five out of seven state nominations contested. Wolfmen are leading in most of the congressional contests also with Frank Timm, Wolf nominee in the ninth apparently lost to Martin Brancon, democratic nominee of two years ago by a close margin.

The Thief River team traveled to Warren Tuesday evening for a twilight game with the fast club representing that city and returned home later in the evening on the short end of a 14 to 6 score. The game was a non-league contest and will be one of several twilight exhibitions to be played in the next few weeks.

Young pitching prospects on the local club were used in this contest, with Floyd Olson pitching very effective ball for four innings of the game.

A return contest will be played with the Warren team on the Thief River diamond Friday evening of next week, the contest to be another twilight affair. Revenge is in the eyes of the locals and Warren is scheduled to get a neat trimming in this meeting.

To date, eighty-seven beginners and forty-five swimmers have been enrolled in the swimming classes being conducted in the Tindolph park and sponsored by the local chapter of the American Red Cross The beginners classes being held in the afternoons will go on a new schedule beginning today. The revised schedule is as follows: at 1:30, 2:00, 2:30, and 3:00 classes of "Crabs" will be conducted. At 3:30 the "Mud Hens" class will meet. Life saving classes will be held at 4:00 o'clock. This objective is being carried out in the local instruction. Beginners are classified as "sinkers" until they are able to confidently jump into deep water, swim out 25 feet, turn and swim back to the starting point. This test, can be passed by the average person in six to eight lessons, and will overcome the fear of water which most persons possess.

Youth Congress to be On the Air July 4th

Cleveland (YNS)—Young America will get an opportunity to air its woes—if the radio officials don't back down.

Officers of the American Youth Congress who expect delegates representing more than 2,000,000 organized young people to attend their Third Youth Congress to be held here on July 4 took a tip from the coming political conventions.

Both the Democratic and Republican conventions are making elaborate preparations for broadcasting from the floor. Microphones hidden in lapel flowers and other stunts are being prepared. Youth Congress officers reasoned that their convention might be just as interesting, and maybe easier for a tired radio audience to swallow.

Radio officials, button-holed by AYC officers listened and agreed. A special sensitive mike on the platform will pick up the speeches and resolutions, as well as extraneous remarks of the delegates.

Legion Convention

about 25,000 people who witnessed the parades Sunday.

The convention next year will be held in this city some time in the middle of June and will continue from Saturday through Monday.

The prize for being the first group to arrive at Fergus Falls was won by the Thief River Falls auxiliary drum corps. They arrived in the city on Saturday noon. The drum corps distinguished themselves by taking a very active part in the convention activities. No drum corps competition was held this year.

First place in the convention parade was won by the Ninth District Legion band. The band was under the direction of E. L. Egermayer, who took the place of the regular leader T. W. Thorson of Crookston. The band also won first prize for being the largest musical group in the parade.

Crippled Children's Clinics Open June 20

Launching Minnesota's Social Security program for Crippled Children, two Orthepedic Clinics, the first of a series of 12, are slated for this month. They will be held at Moorhead, June 20 and at Crookston, June 27.

Clinic services will include medical examination of physically handicapped persons under 21 years of age, consultation with the family physician, recommendation for transportation service to school and consultation on training for future employment. Examiners will be members of the Minnesota-Dakota Orthopedic Club. Vocational advice will be provided through the Division of Re-Education, Minnesota Department of Education.

These clinics are not a new activity in the state. They were inaugurated many years ago by the Minnesota Public Health Association and have been financed annually by Christmas Seal funds. Their value demonstrated, the clinics have been made a part of the Social Security program for the state and will be financed by government funds in the future. The state Christmas Seal organization will continue to take an active part in the educational and organization work in connection with the clinics.

Orthopedic clinics are only one phase of the comprehensive program for the benefit of Minnesota's crippled children made possible through the Social Security appropriation. The new division of Crippled Children's Services will have charge of this program under the direction of Dr. H. E. Hilleboe, head of the tuberculosis division of the State Board of Control. An advisory committee, consisting of representatives of leading organizations in the state interested in the physically handicapped, has been appointed.

The annual $50,000 federal allotment will make possible a census of all crippled children in the state, will provide medical, surgical and corrective care and facilities for diagnosis, hospitalization, and after-care of physically handicapped children. Provision is also made for a public health nursing staff, members of which will go into the homes of physically handicapped children to assist them in carrying out the instructions of the physicians in charge.

It is estimated that there are approximately 10,000 crippled children in the state. Because facilities in the state hospitals for indigent children are not sufficient to care for all those needing this type of care, funds available from the government will make possible the hospitalization of indigent children in other hospitals throughout the state.

Bonus Veterans May be Put Off Relief Rolls

If the plan of certain relief agencies to take war veterans now on relief off relief rolls when they receive their bonus is carried out it will be tantamount to telling war veterans who are out of work that they shall receive no benefit whatever from the bonus the government has given them....

At this writing an effort is being made in Minneapolis to take war veterans off the relief line if they receive adjusted service certificates in excess of $300. Veterans who are receiving a bonus have received notice from the Executive Council, War Veterans Relief Agency, that they will receive no further relief orders because of that fact....

If this is carried out it will be in conflict with the true spirit of the bonus, the benefits of which are to accrue to all veterans regardless of their economic status as a reward for the service they rendered to a thankful government. The bonus for the ex-service man who is out of work then becomes a mere mockery.

Amendment 2 Will Reduce School Aid

"The money lost if Amendment 2 passes providing that after January 1, 1937, no tax shall be imposed on any real or tangible personal property for any state purpose except the one mill tax for roads' will have to be made up from other sources already overburdened or from new sources which will overtax those least able to pay," said Mrs. Myrtle Hooper Dahl, regional director of the National Classroom Teachers Association, Monday, June 15 on the final "North Star School" broadcast for the spring months sponsored by the Minnesota Education Association over WCCO. "To eliminate the one mill school tax, the proposed amendment will cut $1,400,000 from the apportioned state aid. This would be about $3.50 per pupil."

Walter E Englund, field director of the M. E. A., in a radio interview with Supt. F. G. Brandes of Howard Lake, June 8, pointed out that failure of the state to pay supplemental aid in full causes the poorer school districts in the state to be burdened with tax levies beyond their power to pay or reduces the school services such districts can give their children. "The education of the child," said Mr. Englund, "is a common responsibility, and whenever the resources of the local community are insufficient to provide a minimum basic training for the children the resources of the state must be thrown into the balance, and the pledged assistance of the state paid in full".

The broadcasts concluded the spring series sponsored by the M. E. A. over a seven weeks period. Speakers on the programs have included Robert Ringdahl, principal of Corcoran School, Minneapolis, chairman of the radio committee; Miss Daisy Brown, Stillwater, past president of the M. E. A.; Dean Floyd B. Moe, Virginia Junior College, president of the M. E. A.; President Lotus D. Coffman, University of Minnesota; President Frank D. McElroy, Mankato State Teachers College; Edgar E. Sharp, Moorhead, president of the Minnesota School Board Association; Mr. Englund, and Mrs. Dahl. The speakers have been assisted by Ramon L. Irwin, University of Minnesota; Supt. Myron E. Smith, Canby; Supt. S. G. Reinertsen, of Moorhead; Supt. F. G. Brandes, of Howard Lake. Music has been furnished by School groups from Northfield, St. Cloud, South High School, Minneapolis, Sleepy Eye, Mountain Lake, Chisholm, and Aitkin.

The committee in charge of the series included in addition to the chairman, Mr. Ringdahl, and the field director, Mr. Englund, G. H. Sanberg, Rochester, Otto Haack, Pine River, R. R. Sorenson, Tracy, Harold Larson, Milaca, Thomas Christoffel, St. Paul, Barbara Sengir, Minneapolis, Andrew Meldahl, Duluth, and S. G. Reinertsen, of Moorhead.

The league leading local team romped away with Garnes to the tune of 19 to 3 on the Garnes diamond last Sunday. A hectic fourth inning wherein 4 of the local batsmen went to the plate twice and which netted 9 scores, ruined the game so far as Garnes was concerned.

They allowed seven hits. Pug Lund on the mound for Garnes also allowed seven hits and struck out eight batsmen.

Water Gets Scarce, But Removing Clog In the Financial Channel Brings Relief

Water has been getting scarce at Thief River Falls. It seems that there was none of the lifegiving fluid coming down the river from Red Lakes in spite of the fact that the city is paying a man something like $45 per month to watch the dam and keep the water coming this way.

It came to such a pass in fact, that one of the city fathers decided to journey to the lake and see the waterman to find out what was holding up the water. He was informed that the dam was being kept closed by orders of the Indian Agent and so like Mahomet who went to the mountain, the city daddy went to the Indian Agent to inquire if there should by any chance be a shortage of water in Red Lake inasmuch as the supply had been cut off from the city. He was assured that there is lots and lots of water in the lake, and that in fact the authorities were anxious to release some of it. But there was a clog in the channel, in the financial channel, it developed. It seems that persons up near the lake had a bill among several other bills that were incurred by the city's engineer during a process of dredging, straightening and cleaning up of the river channel a couple of years ago, and this bill, a matter of about $218, was so heavy that unless it was cleared away it would be impossible to lift the gates of the dam.

However, when the report was brought to the attention of the council, it proved equal to the occasion, and on Saturday Alderman Christofferson and the Superintendent of Water and Light made a trip to the lake with a city check to use as a pry as it were. It proved to be an adequate crowbar too, for the gates of the dam were opened high and wide and water, tons and tons of it, is rolling down the channel to rescue the city from the drouth.

Junior League Wins One and Loses One

Post 117 junior leaguers won one and lost one last week when they defeated Red Lake Falls juniors in a lop-sided ball game, 21 to 7, and lost a heartbreaker to Grand Forks 6 to 2. The first game was featured by a cannonading led by M. Ness and H. Sahl of the locals. Hellquist on the mound for Post 117, again presented a fine species of hurling. A return game is to be played at Red Lake Falls on Tuesday, June 30.

On Saturday evening, the locals played Grand Forks there at an evening game in which they surprised the strong Grand Forks aggregation by leading 6 to 2 until the eight inning and apparently had the game in the bag when Grand Forks was allowed to drive in six runs on a couple of misjudged balls. Sahl on the mound for the locals again pitched a good grade of baseball. The team showed much improvement over the first game with Grand Forks Games have been scheduled with Crookston, East Grand Forks, and Argyle, Coach Geo. Lee stated this week.

Ann Holt of Alvarado, Minnesota, arrived Saturday to begin work as an operator in the Beauty Dell in this city.

Juniors Present an Interesting Program in the Evening

About 100 delegates from all parts of the state and two to three hundred Minnesota Farmers Union members attended the special state convention of the group held in this city on Monday. The convention which wound up shortly before midnight with a Junior program voted after several hours of debate to change the name of the union to "Cooperative Union Activities" and authorized its state board of directors to perfect amalgamation with the Minnesota division of the Farmers Educational and Cooperative Union of America.

An agreement whereunder a merger of the Minnesota Farmers Union which Monday changed its name to Co-operative Union Activities and the Minnesota division of the Farmers Educational and Co-operative Union of America can be accomplished, was reached in a joint meeting of the state board of the activities group, J. Itasca Pageant to be Staged Sunday June 28

Paying tribute to the fortitude, trials, tribulations and eventual success of the first churchmen in the state, Minnesota state parks historical pageants will be given over to commemoration of the first missionaries to work among the Indians in a series of nine presentations to begin Sunday, June 28, in Itasca state park, midway between Bemidji and Park Rapids.

Staged by the Minnesota Department of Conservation in cooperation with the Northwestern Minnesota Historical association, the pageants will employ a cast of more than 200 persons including 50 Indians, who will live in a model Indian camp during the pageant series. In addition to the Itasca park dates, June 28, July 12 and 26, August 9 and 23 and September 6, the pageant will be offered for 3 days in Jay Cooke state park near Duluth on July 17, 18 and 19.

Amphitheaters with nature setting the stage, will serve as backgrounds for the historical episodes many of which took place on the actual spots where reenactments will be presented, on the shores of Lake Itasca, source of the Mississippi river, and on the historic banks of the St. Louis river in Jay Cooke park.

Divided into two parts, the five episodes will recount historical happenings in various parts of Minnesota, starting with an Indian village scene long before the advent of the white man. The coming of the Jesuit and Franciscan fathers to the Lake Superior region and Father Hennepin's discovery of St. Anthony Falls will be recounted as will the early mission days near Lac qui Parle with the experiences of the pioneer men and women being vividly described.

The memory of Joseph Nicollet will be honored with an episode set on the shore of Leech Lake, where Rev. Boutwell saved the French explorer from a band of marauding Indians. A typical Indian celebration of a century ago will also be presented with Sioux and Chippewa tribe members participating in dance contests and competitive games. The story of George Satlin and his expedition to the Pipestone quarries in extreme southeastern Minnesota will likewise be reenacted. One of the several novelties to be offered will be an Indian version of the white man's best known hymn, Onward Christian Soldiers, according to Harold Searles, pageant director.

The 1936 pageants will be given under direction of Grover M. Conzet, director of the forestry division of the conservation department with Mr. Earle A Barker, Bemidji, president of the Northwestern Minnesota Historical association assisting. Mr. H Z. Mitchell, editor, The Bemidji Pioneer, is publicity director, to be assisted by George H. Bradley, Minnesota Tourist Bureau director.

More Than Half Of Cars on Road Have Bad Lights

More than half the automobiles on Minnesota highways have defective lights and 10 per cent have bad brakes, if results of an extensive check by the state highway patrol are indicative of average conditions.

In the past six weeks the patrol has arrested nearly 1,500 drivers for faulty brakes, defective lights and failure to posses a driver's license, according to Chief John P. Arnoldy.

Of 24,574 cars checked for brake efficiency by the patrol in all parts of the state, 2,472 could not pass the inspection. Of 9,729 cars checked as to lights, 5,770 failed to get approval. In the matter of driver's licenses, 32,191 drivers were checked and 574 did not have licenses with them.

All who did not have a driver's license in their possession—were taken into court. Among the motorists with defective brakes or lights, 888 were arrested and fined as being serious menaces to other traffic, while the remainder were given 48 hours in which to get their equipment in good condition.

Joe Louis, the Detroit Brown Bomber was bombed out of the championship picture by Max Schmeling, a slow-moving, hard-working German boy who couldn't be scared out of the fight before it started.

DUMP IS POOR HIDING PLACE FOR LAW-BREAKERS

Springfield—Nowadays a fella can't even trust the dump grounds with a secret. Whatever caused Ray Neumann, game warden, to look for evidence in the city dump is a deep mystery, but also Neumann found two pheasant heads in an old pail one day recently. Very carelessly, the owner of the pail had neglected to remove the tag, so Neumann, who was accompanied by another game warden from St. James, continued his investigations at the home of L. G. Rethwill, Springfield auto painter. There the garbage can revealed further evidence that pheasant had been gracing the table of late, and the result was a $25 fine imposed by a New Ulm Justice of the Peace

Max Schmeling, who knocked out Joe Louis touted by sport-writers as a super-man in the 12th round of their scheduled 15 round bout Friday night. The fight was one of the most sensational in ring history. All the sport-writers were proven wrong in their forecasts, as they were unanimous in declaring that Schmeling could not last as much as five rounds with the Detroit negro. Schmeling will meet Jas Braddock for the world championship this fall. If he wins it will be the first time in history that an ex-heavyweight champion stages a comeback.

STATE ROAD PROGRAM AWAITS ACTION BY EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

The state highway department's proposed $7,400,000 federal aid road construction program for the fiscal year beginning July 1 cannot be launched until the state executive council authorizes the sale of bonds to meet the state's share of the program, according to N. W Elsberg, state highway commissioner.

The legislative authorized a $4,000,000 issue of highway bonds to match a $3,400,000 federal aid allowance for this fiscal year. The executive council, however, must approve the bond issue before the highway department can obtain the money. Mr. Elsberg said he hopes for early action by the council so there will not be too much delay in getting the program under contract.

Iron Ore Shipments Show Sharp Increase

Evidence of business improvement is offered by the substantial increase in iron ore shipped from state-owned mines.

Iron ore shipments from state-owned mines totalled 1,407,177 tons for the period from January 1 to June 13, 1936, according to F. A. Wildes, director of the division of land and minerals.

In the corresponding period of 1935, 998,464 tons were shipped.

During the 1936 period, shipments from all mines in Minnesota totalled 4,649,952 tons as compared with 2,535,744 tons for the same period in 1935.

WPA Activities Are Outlined By Hopkins

With necessary legislation passed by both houses of Congress and signed by President Roosevelt, Harry L. Hopkins, national administrator of the Works Progress Administration, led a broadcast discussion last Saturday over sixty stations of the NBS network The discussion, which was carried on by a number of prominent national people, had as its objective the outlining of the new program which becomes effective July 1.

In the broadcast discussion, Mr. Hopkins revealed that there will be no official break between June 30 and July 1. Except for minor changes. WPA projects now in operation, or already approved but not started, will continue without interruption.

Other facts revealed in the broadcast were that eligibility for WPA work will be determined by local authorities and will be on the basis of need; that prevailing wages, on an hourly basis, will be paid but the number of hours worked will not be much greater than at present; as in the past, no project worker or administrative employee will be asked to make a contribution to any political party, nor will political endorsement be required to obtain a job; that farm to market roads will be continued along with others, with the cooperation of the governmental subdivisions.

According to figures presented on the broadcast, there are more than 90,000 projects in operation throughout the nation, and the administrative cost over the whole nation has been approximately 4 per cent of the total money spent. Women have also had their share of employment, the number being 400,000 or 16 per cent of all the people at work.

Closing the broadcast, Mr. Hopkins expressed the belief that American citizens unemployed, some through no fault of their own, should and will have jobs. "We know that they will continue to do an honest day's work in return for wages," he stated. "We go forward into the next year with new determination to improve our work, and strive to keep faith with the American public."

The broadcast was heard all over Minnesota. Special gatherings were arranged for that purpose, under the direction of Victor Christgau, state administrator. In the seventh district, Director Kovarik placed the arrangements in charge of the area engineers and their assistants According to reports received from some of the engineers, timekeepers and county supervisors, a large number of radio meetings were held to listen in on Mr. Hopkin's staff meeting.

MAKES OWN PLANE AND TAKES TO AIR

Slayton—Goodwin Carlson, Lake Sarah township near Slayton, has manufactured an airplane in which it is not unusual for him to drop in (literally) on relatives after a trip about the country. The machine, a light, one-seated monoplane, which took him several months to build, is operated by a small 30 horse power motor. In one trip of 280 miles the plane consumed only 13 gallons of gas in four hours of flying time. Carlson's best speed so far has been at the rate of 85 miles an hour, flying from Morris to Marshall, the trip being completed in an hour and five minutes. An interesting feature of the plane is that the wings can be folded, permitting storage in a shed 6x20 feet. Carlson became air minded about 10 years ago, making an extensive study of aviation since that time. The greater part of his studies have been about the machines themselves.

"THE HUB OF NORTHERN MINNESOTA"

Man has many attributes in common with the animals, and probably the outstanding is our antipathy to change. A dog may have a cruel master, but tho he is starved and abused, he will return to him if he is a good dog (from our point of view). A cow taken from the farm where it was born and raised will return if it is not kept in confinement for a period. Horses are of the same disposition and cats are proverbial homebodies.

So it is with most humans. A family will settle on a barren sandridge and attempt to farm it thru years of labor and disappointment, without realizing that to remain is to perish. Others will live in Eden without realizing that they reside in Paradise. We are inclined to become accustomed and consequently oblivious and unappreciative of our immediate surroundings. Yet altho is is said that "pastures are greener from afar", wanderers are the exception rather than the rule.

Nevertheless, economic changes and the development of the county does work immense and farreaching realignments. The Minneapolis Star pictures Fargo as a future city of 200,000 people. In the past Minneapolis was a wholesale center and Fargo a trading center. But in the new alignment the Twin City area is becoming a manufacturing center and Fargo a wholesale center, serving a constantly expanding area to the west.

While citizens of Thief River Falls generally appreciate the growing importance of our city it is only when visitors voice their surprise at the rapid growth and activity in our community that we can fully realize what an important part in the development of this vast Northern empire, this city is playing.

During the past six years when other communities have for the most part had to be content with holding their own, Thief River Falls has built a fine new hospital, a terminal elevator, a large municipal auditorium, added 1750 horsepower to its electric power plant, built parks and playgrounds, is building a fine enclosed skatingrink, has erected many small business structures and hundreds of fine homes. Yet we are suffering from an acute housing shortage which it would take the construction of two hundred homes to assuage. There is not a vacant store building in the city, and many businesses are waiting for an opportunity to rent a building so they can launch a new venture in our city.

Truly the future for our city looks bright. With the constantly improving transportation facilities and a network of good roads, our city has become the "Hub of Northern Minnesota". Our trade territory extends from the Red River to the Red Lakes and from the Canadian border to the South Polk county line, and five years from now Thief River Falls should be a city of ten thousand people.

THE END OF THE MUGWUMP

The recent primary election among other things proved beyond a doubt that the days of the political mugwump is over. Practically all down the line, in both the farmer-labor and republican parties, the regular endorsed candidates carried away the nominations with overwhelming majorities. The same can probably be said of the democratic party where the Wolf group carried away most of the nominations. There can be no doubt that the Wolfmen are the regulars in the democratic ranks in this state and that the Moonan-Regan crowd gained control originally thru the aid of republicans who entered the democratic primaries to aid in nominating reactionaries whom they believed would favor a fusion candidate.

Their plans in this line being frustrated thru their own selfishness and the selfishness of those with whom they planned to merge, they took no interest in the democratic primary in this election. The result was that the republicans again showed their full strength and the democrats again dropped down to their usual numbers. Regardless of what the Solid South may be, Minnesota democrats have always been liberals, and sponsored a middle of the road policy as between the reactionary republicans and the left liberals and radicals.

However, what we particularly want to point out, is the fact that the unattached voter upon whom the mugwumps must depend if they are to carry away a nomination, is an erratic animal and can no longer be depended upon to come out and vote in the primary election. They have long ago learned that the mugwump, deliberately spurning his own group is a selfseeking politician or a dumb-bell who is powerless to redeem his campaign pledges. As a result, the endorsed candidates generally, were easy winners. Even Magnus Johnson, long a powerful figure in Minnesota politics found that he was small potatoes when he attempted to thwart the will of the organization that he had helped to build. He discovered that the organization was responsible for his greatness in a much larger degree than he was responsible for its strength.

We must admit that we did not have those delicious thrills of apprehension which some of our fellow farmer-laborites enjoyed previous to the primary Neither do we fear the outcome of the general election this fall. The republicans, always decidedly party conscious, showed close to their full strength in the primary and we are willing to let them have all the satisfaction they can get out of their large primary vote. The unattached voters are as a class, liberal and when the lines are drawn between rank re-action as exemplified by the republicans and progress the unattached voter will go with the progressives.

THE NEWSPAPERS PUT IT OVER

Interesting sidelights on the two outstanding circuses of the year; the Schmeling-Louis fight and the republican national convention are shed by a perusal of the news-columns of the daily papers.

'Newsdom', Washington, (D. C.) newspaper of the newspaper world points out that the Landon boom was engineered by newspapermen. In fact Newsdom states that if all the non-newspapermen had left the republican convention, there would have been little if any difference noted. The newspaper publishers and scribes so overshadowed an outnumbered all other classes, Newsdom says. Among the publishers and writers who were responsible for the Landon boom and his subsequent nomination by the convention, we find William Allen White, Henry J. Allen, Senator Arthur Capper, Joseph W. Martin, (North Attleboro Chronicle), Col Frank Knox, (Chicago News), Geo. H. Moses, Arthur Vandenberg (Grand Rapids, (Mich.) Herald), A. L. Miller (Battle Creek Enquirer), Frank E. Gannett, (Newspapers in 14 cities), Oscar Stauffer (Stauffer chain of newspapers), John P. Harris (Ottowa Herald, Hutchinson Herald, Chanute Tribune), Fred Brinkenhoff (Pittsburgh Headlight), Roy Roberts and Lacey Haines (Kansas City Star).

Associated with these luminaries of the kept press world is a host of editors and syndicate writers whom they control. And what a build-up they will make.

A small item in the sporting news last week which probably escaped the attention of most of the fight fans stated that Joe Louis is under contract with Jacobs and with the William Randolph Hearst organization. This probably accounts for the fact that the colored boy grew so fast and soared so high, only to fall like a punctured balloon when he met the German boy who could not be scared out of the fight before he entered the ring.

It's a great game, this newspaper game. A United States presidency or a world heavyweight championship, the publicity boys furnish the ballyhoo and the gullible public furnishes the votes and the shekels and when the game is over the inside gang holds the jackpot. Harding, Firpo, Coolidge, Carpentier, Hoover, Carnera; anything from a Kansas oil promoter who speaks English like a Kentuck Moonshiner to a Detroit Ham and Egger, when the blah, blah boys inflate them, they soar high, wide and handsome. But when they fall, what a headache for the fish that swallowed hook, line, and sinker.

A week ago the heavyweight champion Braddock didn't have a ghost of a chance against Louis. Today, the stage is already being re-set in the prizefight ring and the sportswriters believe that Braddock is after all, the topnotch and will likely be able to take Schmeling. Over in the presidential ring the fanfare is on. In September the prize-fight ring will pull its next act and it will be followed in November with the premier show of the year in the presidential ring. We shall see what we shall see. But be careful where you put your money.

QUITE APPROPRIATE

The Minneapolis Journal is carrying a daily illustrated strip on the Life of Landon. Inasmuch as such strips usually feature comic, burlesque or fantastically, bizarre subjects, the strip should be quite appropriate.

WHY THE CHANGE OF HEART?

(Minnesota Leader)

Senator A. J. Rockne appears to have seen a new light. He says that automobile license fees ought to be raised.

Rockne's contention is that unless this be done the state bonded indebtedness will increase to a point burdensome to taxpayers of the state.

The Goodhue senator is quite right. But what he has now discovered was quite apparent to all the Farmer-Labor legislators back in 1933. They voted against reduction in the license fees at that time and pointed out the dangers ahead.

Mr. Rockne voted with the reactionaries of the senate who demanded that "the tax-load be lightened" by cutting the fees in half.

Rockne's reversal of position as regards highway financing is merely added evidence of the fact that the Farmer-Laborites were right in resisting the plan of the reactionaries to cut the fees and thereby cripple the state highway department in its road program.

We are loath to believe that Rockne has seen the error of his ways. He knew then, as did others of his gang, that reduction in the license fees would operate to the disadvantage of the highway department, and, as a direct result, would tend to discredit the Farmer-Labor state administration.

No one is fooled by Rockne's change of front. His discovery is that the people of Minnesota are next to the political objectives the Rockne crowd had in view in cutting the fees in two.

THE LIBERAL REPUBLICANS—1936 MODEL

(Kanabec County Progressive)

When Lord Cornwallis surrendered Yorktown to General Washington, the British bands played the "World Is Upside Down" as they stacked their arms and gave over the last hold they had in the colonies. To the British it was hardly conceivable that the small, ragged, ill-equipped forces of the colonies could whip the finest troops from the old world—thence the tune "The World Is Upside Down".

The same spirit that moved the shocked British to play the tune that expressed their feelings, struck a good many people after the Republicans convened at their convention last week. When the G. O. P. advocates liberalism, then it is time for the band to play "The World Is Upside Down."

Instead of advocating the curtailment of the various emergency expenditures, the Republicans advocated a "sane expenditure". That in itself was a huge concession for the conservatives to make. Even the most stalwart conservative was afraid to advocate the stopping of government aid to the distressed, as they are well aware that an emergency exists. Hoover's years of inaction as chief executive was the climax that put United States business nearly on the rocks. Even that Republicans see that advocating measures that do not recognize the existing emergency will doom them to failure in November. But, as in the years before, they at heart still believe that the government should help big business because its loss would be a catastrophe to this nation; but they also think that it is wasteful to do anything to help the old and unemployed people. A measure alleviating the suffering of human beings is nonsensical, according to their adage of property rights over humanitarian principles; but they cannot afford to let their ideas be made public.

Governments the World Over

NORWAY

Norway covers a territory of abount 325,000 square kilometers and has a population of about 2,800,000. The Norwegian constitution of 1814 is still the country's basic law. This constitution provides for a peculiar single chamber system, which in the course of time has undergone a remarkable change to a parliamentary type quite opposed to the type originally intended. Like the Swedish form of government adopted in 1809 and the American constitution of 1787, which were the most immediate models, it intended in accordance with Montesquieu's doctrine of the division of powers to create a sharp distinction between an independent executive power, exercised by the king, and an equally independent legislative body, the Storting or General Assembly. The king was therefore to choose his own ministers, who were not to have seats in the Storting or even have excess to it. The power to levy and impose taxes was given to the Storting alone; the king could only propose measures and exercise merely a suspensive veto; he had no right to dissolve the legislature which was elected for three years.

The Storting originally, however, had the right to remain in session only for two months every three years; the right of suffrage was practically restricted to the owners of real property; and the assembly, although chosen as a single chamber, divides after the election into two sections—the larger, the Odelsting, and the smaller, the Lagting, which in all legislative matters had the power of veto against each other, so that when they disagree final decision could be made only in ajoint session of the entire Storting and by a two-thirds majority. This was maintained to assure the balance between the executive power of the king and the legislative power of the assembly. Further assurance was contained in the provision that constitutional changes could be made only by a new Storting after new general elections and by a two-thirds majority and that these constitutional changes should never alter the principles or spirit of the original law.

Nevertheless in the course of time the constitution has been changed almost entirely in its spirit and principles rather than in its structure; the independent executive power of the king has all but disappeared and the Storting has become the sole decisive agency which, as in other parliamentary countries, practically determines the formation or resignation of the cabinet. The chief contributing cause to this development has been the fact that during the union with Sweden, the Norwegian king was also the king of Sweden and that consequently the struggle for separation from Sweden had to be carried on against the royal power. To this was added the gradual democratization of the Storting, which culminated in 1898 with the introduction of general suffrage. As early as 1869 moreover an annual Storting had been introduced and in 1884 a Storting had despite the king's repeated veto forced through an amendment which made possible the personal attendance of the ministers at legislative sessions.

Although the main features of the constitution of 1814 still remain, the form of government is now decidedly parliamentary except for the fact that the king is still unable to dissolve the Storting. The Norwegian parliamentary governments, however, are usually the cause of the sharp party divisions in the Storting and has resulted in purely minority governments, which function only so long as the opposition parties cannot overturn them.

Local government is largely decentralized. There are popularly elected district and town councils, which elect an administrative committee from their own membership. These councils send representatives to a county council, presided over by a governor who is appointed by the crown and who administers the county affairs in accordance with the decisions of the county council. The units of local government have large powers in connection with such matters as taxation, education, health, housing and poor relief.

All judges are appointed by the king and may not be removed except by legal judgment. In the county and town courts, in both civil and criminal cases, two lay judges generally sit with the trained judge and participate in the decisions not only on the facts but also on the law of the case. Criminal cases which may involve sentences of more than three years are heard by a "lagmandsret", composed of three legally qualified judges and a jury of ten. The jury passes only on the question of guilt, and seven votes are required to convict. In criminal cases the Supreme Court acts only as the court of cassation and may not reverse a case on other than the legal grounds. An interesting feature of the Norwegian and also of the Danish judiciary is the system of conciliation councils elected by the municipal councils for a period of three years. No case can be taken to the courts until after an attempt at settlement has been made through these councils.
